Fiscal court OKs park land purchase

By Frank Boyett

Henderson Fiscal Court agreed Tuesday to pay half of the expected cost of land in the East End for a new community park being developed there by the city of Henderson.

The vacant lot is where the former Audubon Baptist Church stood at Letcher and Helm streets and is currently owned by

■ City pursuing grant for playground structure, sidewalk, fencing

Citi-Center Office Building LLC, which has agreed to accept $20,000 for the site. Last week the Henderson City Commission approved buying the land, but that vote was contingent on fiscal court paying half of the cost.

"It's a project we've been kicking back and forth for a year now," said Judge-executive Hugh McCormick, who noted he grew up just down the street from the site. "The county is going to live up to what we said we would do. We're trying to make an investment in the young people.

"Pretty much all we're doing is helping purchase the property," McCormick said. "The city will have total ownership."

"I'm really excited about it," said Magistrate Butch Puttman, whose district encompasses the site. "This is really a step in the right direction for the youth out there; there's really nothing for them to do. I think it's a great investment in a part of town that's not what it was when I grew up out there."

The city is also seeking a state grant of $40,350, which would help develop the park. The grant money would be used to install sidewalks, fencing, benches, trash cans and a playground structure expected to cost nearly $20,000.

McCormick also noted that the new county park at Smith Mills "turned out to be nice," and that county jail inmates have already begun clearing land in Baskett for a community park there on about three acres.

"The court continues to pursue these things," he said.

Other items on the agenda Tuesday included:

Smith Mills VFD: The court went into executive session for a short time and after re-emerging authorized McCormick and Charles Alexander to enter

Time Warner changes in sight

By Chuck Stinnett

It's been a year since Time Warner Cable acquired Insight Communications, which has provided cable TV for much of Henderson for many years.

But Insight customers might easily have been unaware of that, because the Insight name has persisted since the merger. That will change somewhat in the coming months; Time Warner Cable recently sent letters to Insight customers, advising them that beginning in May, "your monthly statements will come from Time Warner Cable."

Most other aspects of their Insight cable TV service will remain unchanged, according to Mike Hogan, a TWC corporate spokesman.

"The only change will be that ... monthly statements will come from Time Warner Cable, as well as service updates," Hogan said in an email message to The Gleaner.

The Insight business office on Klutey Park Plaza will remain open, he said.

Further, "There are no changes to rates and billing packages at this time," aside from bills coming from Time Warner Cable in the coming months, he said.

While Insight customers have somewhat different cable TV lineup and plans, "at this time we don't have a timeframe to move them to TWC plans," Hogan said.

However, a TWC website — twc.com/welcomainsight — reports that changes are coming for

Highland's ventilation plans approved

■ Commission gives OK despite area concerns

By Frank Boyett
fboyett@thegleaner.com
270-831-8342

Plans to develop an air shaft for the Highland coal mine about a half-mile from Corydon were approved Tuesday by the Henderson City-County Planning Commission on a split vote despite protests from neighbors.

The property involves 9.2 acres at 12373 U.S. 60-West, near the intersection with Housebridge Road. Corydon Resources LLC was asking that 2.3 acres currently zoned agricultural and 6.8 acres currently zoned highway commercial be rezoned heavy industrial and consolidated. The mine's permits are in the process of being transferred to Highland Mining Co. LLC of St. Louis.

Dennis Massoth, a Corydon resident who is manager of engineering for the firm, said the mine has about 20 years of reserves to the east of Corydon, and that the ventilation fan is a necessity for mining to continue.

"The existing fan we have is operating at maximum capacity and it can't be upgraded any further. We need this fan. It needs to be at this piece of property. If we don't get this fan we will lay off more people as the mine advances."

"We know it's going to make noise, but we want to lessen the impact on the residents," said Bob Bosch of Evansville, general manager for Kentucky operations.

Earthen berms will be installed to help shield the fan's noise from neighbors, but Bosch went further and offered to plant evergreens atop the berms to further deaden the noise.

Furthermore, company officials noted that an acoustic silencer will be installed, which will make the fan quieter than when it operated at a site on Upper Delaware Road.

County Engineer Bill Hubiak said there were "zero complaints" from Upper Delaware Road residents after the fan was installed there, although they had expressed noise concerns beforehand.

Residents of the Corydon neighborhood pointed out they live closer to the fan site than did those on Upper Delaware Road.

"Would you want it this close to your house where you have to listen to it 24/7?" asked Dirk Hatfield.

"It's annoying."

Rick Evans said he went to a similar fan site in Union County at Dodge Hill and "I don't know how those people live there. It's just unacceptable."

He advocated "putting the whole set-up underground. In this case we need to ask a little more of the mining company to take care of the problem."

"There's going to be a little noise ... but we ought to be able to sit outside and listen to the birds," Evans said.

Traci Kalnins expressed concerns about the fan lessening the value of her property, and Kimberly Caton sent a letter, which was read into the record.

Caton said she enjoys the peace and quiet of the countryside. "I do not want this to turn into a heavy industrial area"

Water district going online for customer service gain

By Erin Schmitt

Henderson County Water District is looking at a pair of initiatives to help improve customer service.

During a recent meeting, the district's commissioners approved adding online bill payment for customer convenience.

It would be the customer's choice whether they would want to pay online, by mail or in person, said Lisa Gish, the district's office manager.

The Neil Group, based in Brentwood, Tenn., would oversee the online collections.

A website would be set up where customers may put in their account number and how much they owe. There is a $2.05 convenience fee per transaction that applies to online payments, Gish said.

The water district will pay $6.95 per month to the Neil Group and a $495 set up fee for the service.

Gish also talked about possibly setting up a computer at the office that would allow customers online access payment when they come to pay their bill. She said the website could be available as early as sometime this week.

Aside from the online billing, the water district is also contemplating adding a OneCall service like the one used by Henderson County Schools.

District manager David Moore began exploring the option in earnest after some customers complained about not receiving notification when a boil advisory was issued last month after a water

The young legal eagles of Henderson County High School have a challenging civil case before them this weekend.

A politician attending a gun debate rally got into it with a scholar and the latter ended up dead following the debate. The politician maintains it was suicide but a news network implicated he was behind the shooting.

The fictional defamation case will be tried as part of the Kentucky High School Mock Trial Tournament being held this Friday through Sunday.

The HCHS Criminal Law Club will be participating in the mock trial, along with 29 other teams for a chance to advance to the national high school tournament.

It will be Henderson's first appearance in the tournament, which is being held at Eastern Kentucky University's Business and Technology Center on Friday and at the Fayette County courthouse on Saturday and Sunday.

HCHS began offering classes in criminal law last fall under the supervision of Madison Sewell, a former federal prosecutor turned teacher. Sewell was the featured guest speaker at the Henderson City Lions Club meeting Tuesday.

"We've had a great experience learning the ropes this first year," Sewell said. "I think we've started something great."

The teacher introduced four of his students to also speak at the meeting: seniors Drea Staser and DeShawn Chambers and juniors William Pruitt and Ashley Marshall. The teens spoke about the classes they are

Kenergy Virginia-bound to help with winter storm

Gleaner staff

In anticipation of a winter storm that could dump 12 inches of snow and pack high winds, the Henderson-based Kenergy Corp. rural electric co-op dispatched three crews and trucks to northern Virginia to help a co-op there.

Rappahannock Electric Cooperative in Fredericksburg, Va., asked for crews from other states to act as standbys in case the storm proves as bad as predicted, according to Kenergy. The storm is expected to hit the Fredericksburg area sometime today and linger through Thursday.

Six Kenergy crew members left at noon Tuesday for a 10-hour drive to Rappahannock Electric.

Rappahannock Electric has 157,000 connections in parts of 22 counties.

Rural electric co-ops commonly provide crews to help one another during such emergencies.

Lake tapped as interim head at Hoptown

Gleaner staff

Retired Henderson Community College president Pat Lake is taking on his latest special assignment within the Kentucky Community and Technical College System.

KCTCS President Michael B. McCall has appointed Lake as interim president of Hopkinsville Community College, with his duties beginning today.

Lake will serve until a successor is found for James E. Selbe, who stepped down as president of Hopkinsville Community College last week and asked to be re-assigned within KCTCS one week after returning from being on unpaid administrative leave pending investigation of unspecified misconduct.

Lake has a long history with KCTCS and has held leadership roles at several colleges within the system. He served as president of Henderson Community College for 25 years before retiring from the position in December 2010, although he remained connected to the college and assisted with its reaccreditation process.

During his tenure in Henderson, Lake saw enrollment more than double. He helped establish course offerings and training programs and oversaw three major campus construction projects.

He continued to work with KCTCS on several special projects following his departure, including serving as interim president at Ashland Community and Technical College last July and August.

Earlier in his career, Lake served as interim president of the former Owensboro Community College and dean of academic affairs for the former Jefferson Community College.

"I am confident Dr. Lake will provide excellent leadership during this time of transition for Hopkinsville Community College," McCall said in a statement. "His record of experience and success within KCTCS will be an asset for the college as we begin the search process for the next president. I hope the Hopkinsville community will join me in welcoming him to HCC."

Local man sentenced in bicycle-injury accident

Gleaner staff

A Henderson man was sentenced to 10 years for allegedly driving into a boy riding a bicycle and then leaving the scene of the accident.

Clayton L. Parker, 23, 600 block of Third Street, was sentenced Monday in Henderson Circuit Court to 10 years for second-degree assault, five years for leaving the scene of an accident and 90 days for failure to maintain insurance. Sentences will run concurrently.

The charges stem from a collision which occurred on Clay Street on Aug. 26 when Parker struck an 11-year-old boy who was riding his bicycle. According to court documents, witnesses told police that the driver of the vehicle, later identified as Parker, "never hit the brakes after striking the 11-year-old."

The collision knocked the boy to the ground, but the bike was caught on the vehicle Parker was driving and dragged two blocks, court records said. The bike was located in the parking lot of Metzger's Tavern on Powell Street where the vehicle had jumped the curve, officials said. The vehicle and Parker were later located at a residence on Julia Street.

During the investigation, Parker told police that while making a turn, he struck something. Parker told law enforcement that he didn't see what he had hit and kept driving.

Court records said that the boy suffered a broken leg and a brain bleed.

Kentucky trooper charged with DUI

GLASGOW — A Kentucky State Police trooper has been charged with drunken driving. The Glasgow Daily Times cited a citation from the Cave City Police Department in reporting that 27-year-old Casey Joseph Wethington of Columbia was arrested Sunday on the charge.

Injured worker moved to Evansville hospital

Gleaner staff

A contract employee injured Monday while working on a project at Atkinson and Clay streets has been transferred to an Evansville hospital for treatment.

Tom Williams, director of engineering for the Henderson Water Utility, said the employee was taken to St. Mary's Medical Center Monday night.

Further information regarding the man's condition was unavailable.

Emergency responders were dispatched to the scene around 4:24 p.m.

Monday after pipe weighing between 2,300 and 2,600 pounds landed on the worker's leg.

Williams said the worker was in a trench guiding a piece of pipe down the trench when the pipe came loose. Officials said it took about 15 minutes to extricate the man and get him into an ambulance. Firefighters used a spine board to haul him out of the 7 1/2 foot trench.

The injured worker is employed by Scott&Ritter of Bowling Green, which was contracted by the city for the Canoe Creek Phase 2 project.

Training consortium next chamber topic

The benefits to businesses of joining the local employee training organization will be the topic of the Henderson Chamber of Commerce's next Brown Bag Series luncheon presentation on Monday.

"How the Northwest Kentucky Training Consortium Can Help Your Business" will be presented by consortium Executive Director Ellen Redding.

The consortium provides discounted workforce training to large and small companies in Henderson, Union, Webster and McLean counties by scheduling classes of interest to and requested by multiple employers.

The training can cover OSHA classes, industry-specific training, computer skills, communications, customer service, supervisory skills and other topics of interest to area companies.

The Brown Bag luncheon will begin at noon next Monday at the chamber office at 230 Second St., Suite 320.

Brown Bag presentations are free for chamber members, who can bring a lunch or call the chamber to have a meal arranged for them.

For more information or for reservations, contact the chamber at 826-9531 or info@hendersonchamber.org.

Ag Awards Breakfast deadline today

Today is the deadline for making reservations for the Henderson Chamber of Commerce's 2013 Agriculture Awards Breakfast on Thursday.

The event will feature the announcement of the winners of the Agriculturalist of the Year and Lifetime Achievement in Agriculture.

The featured speaker will be Roger Thomas, director of the Governor's Office on Agriculture Policy. Sam Ball will be the emcee.

The buffet breakfast by Golden Corral will begin at 7:15 a.m. Thursday at the Henderson Fine Arts Center.

The cost to attend the event is 87 cents, which symbolizes the profit a farmer would make on the food on a typical breakfast plate.

Because of the popularity of this event, people who come to the breakfast without a reservation cannot be guaranteed breakfast or a seat at a table. Theater seating will be available to those without reservations.

For more information or for reservations, contact the chamber at info@hendersonchamber.org or 826-9531.

Old Madisonville Road to close Thursday

Old Madisonville Road (Kentucky 285) will be closed to traffic for several hours Thursday just south of the four-way stop at Madison Street (Kentucky 136) in the Weaverton neighborhood, according to the Kentucky Transportation Cabinet.

A state road crew will be replacing a cross drain near Lee Drive, three-tenths of a mile south of Kentucky 136.

The work will begin around 8:30 a.m. Thursday and is expected to be completed by about 1 p.m., weather permitting.

There will no marked detour.

Local passenger vehicle traffic can detour using Lee Drive and Porter Drive.

However, commercial truck traffic will be required to take Kentucky 1299 to the Kentucky 425/South Bypass.

Blue Bridge painting contract awarded

An Ohio firm has been awarded a nearly $10.1 million contract to clean and repaint the Blue Bridge across the Ohio River at downtown Owensboro, the Kentucky Transportation Cabinet announced Tuesday.

Spartan Contracting LLC's successful low bid came in at less than half the state engineer's estimate.

The contract doesn't allow the bridge to be closed to all traffic until after May 12, after the International Bar-B-Que Festival in downtown Owensboro.

However, the contractor can begin working beneath the approach spans as soon as weather permits, the cabinet said.

The deadline for completing the first season of work is Nov. 15. Some additional work, with limited lane closures, is expected in 2014.

Approximately 8,500 vehicles cross the Ohio River on the Blue Bridge between Kentucky and Indiana in an average day.

The structure opened to traffic in September 1940 as a toll bridge. The tolls were discontinued in 1954.

Century wants other ratepayers to absorb losses

By Diana Merritt
Special to The Gleaner

There has been much in the news about Century Aluminum’s efforts to break their contract with Big Rivers Electric in an effort to reduce their cost for power. Century has used false information as well as involving local politicians that were not fully informed in an effort to move public opinion their direction.

Their goal is to have lower rates for electricity by having the other residential and industrial customers in our area subsidize them. They have used the threat of a loss of jobs in the area to move their agenda forward. The potential for losing jobs is a real one. However it is not just the aluminum smelter jobs that are at stake, and that seems to have escaped everyone’s attention.

Big Rivers has 650 employees and stands to lose a significant number of those jobs if the smelters are successful in going to the open market. In addition to the Big Rivers jobs, there are numerous other businesses that provide contract labor to the plants that would likely lose jobs directly due to the plant closings. The Kentucky coal Big Rivers purchases from local mines will be greatly reduced and will impact these area mines. The chain effect of closing one or more of the Big Rivers’ plants will have a significant negative impact on the regional economy.

The power plants owned by Big Rivers were operated by E. ON U.S. as part of the LG&E system prior to the summer of 2009. However, the aluminum smelters knew that under LG&E, their power rates were due to increase significantly when the contracts they had at that time expired and they were forced to go to the open market for power. Therefore, Century and another aluminum smelter were very active in pushing to have the operation of the plants go back to Big Rivers.

This allowed them to enter into a new contract that ensured low cost, stable electricity rates and ensured they would not be forced out of business due to high and volatile power costs. That was only four years ago. However now Century does not want to honor that contract even though their industrial rates are some of the lowest in the nation.

This is a complex situation and no one in Kentucky wants to lose jobs by either the smelters or by Big Rivers. Big Rivers has agreed to allow Century to go to the open market as long as they pay all of the associated costs. This will result in closing one or more of the Big Rivers plants and will mean a significant loss of jobs.

If the region subsidizes Century by passing on increased power costs to the other industrial customers and the residential customers, what will that mean in the long run for our area? Will it really save the aluminum smelter jobs long term? What will happen when the electric prices in the open market go back up, which they will? How much are the other industrial customers and residential customers in Western Kentucky supposed to pay to subsidize Century Aluminum?

The area is being held hostage by a company that wants to privatize gains and socialize their losses. Per data reported in The Associated Press and in market reports, the projected aluminum demand for 2013 is good. On January 8, 2013 Fox Business reported: Looking ahead, Alcoa projected global aluminum demand will grow 7 percent in 2013, thanks to up to 10 percent growth in aerospace and 2 percent to 7 percent in commercial transportation demand.

Does Century really intend to cease operations? Century has shown interest in purchasing the aluminum smelter near Sebree. They are even trying to reopen their plant in Ravenswood, W.Va. They closed that plant in 2009, and when they did they refused to honor the health care and retirement benefits earned by the employees of that plant.

That is reflective of how Century does business. Even as Century is trying to reopen the Ravenswood plant, they are trying to put all cost risks on the other electric customers in that region. The West Virginia Public Service Commission has rejected their requests but Century is trying to do the same thing in Western Kentucky.

I would challenge our representatives to work toward finding a solution that is best for all residents and businesses in our region. It is essential for the long-term economy of our area.

Like tight jeans and Blue Ribbon beer? Then, shhh ... you might be a hipster fixed-gear bicycles. Ultimately, hipsters’ look is one of studied carelessness. It seems inspired by an earlier era; the term “retro chic” is frequently applied.

Their taste in music leans toward bands no one else has ever heard of.

Their taste in food often leans toward locally grown vegan fare — or, alternatively, chili cheese fries.

As for their taste in beer, well ...

Pabst Blue Ribbon beer for years was perhaps the most unhip beer on the market. It was dismissed as a cheap brew consumed mostly by working-class Southerners, as Johnny Russell suggested in his 1973 country hit song: “Rednecks, white socks and Blue Ribbon beer.”

What Sterling Beer once was to Hendersonnians, Pabst was to much of America. From 1975 to 2000, sales of Pabst plunged 90 percent.

But PBR found a following among hipsters, especially in Portland, Ore. It was there that the Lutz Tavern, a popular dive bar, sold cans of Blue Ribbon for just a buck in the late 1990s.

Some observers believe hipsters embraced Pabst precisely because it was so hopelessly out of fashion. Others say PBR’s revival was inspired by a scene in the 1986 cult film “Blue Velvet” in which the ever-edgy Dennis Hopper rejects fashionable, imported Heineken in favor of “Pabst Blue Ribbon!”

Whatever the reason, a following for PBR began on the West Coast.

As a 2003 New York Times Magazine feature detailed, a bright young Pabst marketing manager caught wind of the trend and went to Portland to hang out in hipster bars and find out what was going on.

What was going on was, Pabst Blue Ribbon had become so uncool that it became cool — at least to a segment of the population that despised being marketed to.

The Pabst marketing man recognized this, and quietly launched an anti-marketing marketing campaign.

The company carefully declined to buy commercials on the alternative-rock radio stations that their new consumers listened to.

It turned down an offer by rebel rocker Kid Rock to endorse the brand. Pabst began sponsoring events targeted at skateboarders and bike messengers while carefully avoiding plastering the company name around.

The scheme worked. In late 2009, Fortune magazine reported that while Budweiser sales across the U.S. were down 7 percent over the previous year, and beer sales overall were up just 1.1 percent, sales of Pabst Blue Ribbon were up nearly 30 percent.

At the Lutz Tavern, where a Pabst neon sign glows in the front window, young consumers were going through 20 to 25 cases of PBR on Friday nights. “It’s our No. 1 seller, no questions asked, hands down,” a member of the family that had owned the bar since 1954 told the Fortune reporter.

But it wasn’t just because Blue Ribbon was the cheapest beer available; Pabst cost at least $1 a case more than Busch Light or Keystone Light. “PBR drinkers may want to look down-market,” the magazine reflected, “but they’re willing to spend a little bit extra to make sure no one mistakes them for the mainstream.”

Predictably, Pabst declined to comment for the story.

Hipsters are skewered by some for being the well-educated but perpetually underemployed offspring of affluent households — 21st-century trust fund beatniks — but also for being relentlessly smug and ironic ... and pretentious. (A mock commercial showed up on YouTube recently, hawking a cure for hipsters. The drug’s name? Unpretentiousil.)

Understandably, being called a hipster is not hip.

“The cultural backlash to hipsterdom is huge — so huge, in fact, it’s hard to even find someone who self-identifies as a hipster,” Mike Rugnetta, the host of a series of YouTube videos produced by the PBS Idea Channel, declared in an episode titled “Are You a Hipster?”

By contrast, he said, “with nerds, it’s a much different story ... Unlike hipsters, there are tons of people who self-identify as nerds: math nerds, music nerds, video game nerds, philosophy nerds. Nerds, nerds, nerds, nerds, nerds!”

Rugnetta went on to say that the British actor Simon Pegg — whose movies, especially “Shaun of the Dead,” have quite a nerd following — “says that ‘Being a geek is all about being honest about what you enjoy and not being afraid to demonstrate that affection. It means never having to play it cool about how much you like something.’”

In short, hipsters rub nonhipsters the wrong way because they seem to go to such calculated lengths to look a certain way, act a certain way and like certain things — but resent being recognized for doing so.

Little wonder that the satirical faux-news website The Onion once published a headline: “Two Hipsters Angrily Call Each Other ‘Hipster.’”

Taliban attack count flawed

By Robert Burns
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The U.S.-led military command in Afghanistan no longer will count and publish the number of Taliban attacks, a statistical measure that it once touted as a gauge of U.S. and allied success but now dismisses as flawed.

The move comes a week after the coalition, known as the International Security Assistance Force, acknowledged in response to inquiries that it had incorrectly reported a 7 percent drop in Taliban attacks in 2012 compared to 2011.

In fact, there was no decline at all, ISAF officials now say.

The mistake, attributed to a clerical error, called into question the validity of repeated statements by allied officials that the Taliban was in steep decline.

Anthony Cordesman, a close observer of the war as an analyst at the Center for Strategic and International Studies, said it had been clear for months that ISAF's figures were flawed.

"The truth is they should not have published them in the first place," he said. "A great many people realized from the start that it was a meaningless measurement" because it implies that to succeed, the Taliban has to keep attacking rather than gaining ground by influencing ordinary Afghans.

"Over the last year it has become clearer and clearer that not only was the measurement meaningless, but it became embarrassing because there weren't any (ISAF and Afghan) gains," he added, noting that Taliban attacks last year were more numerous than in 2009, before President Barack Obama sent an extra 30,000 U.S. "surge" troops.

"Basically speaking, we've ended up — after the surge and three more years of fighting — with absolutely nothing that we can tell ourselves that shows the level of progress we did or did not achieve," Cordesman said.

The U.S. and its ISAF allies have pledged to end their combat mission by the end of next year, and while they are likely to leave at least several thousand troops to help train Afghan troops, the Afghans are to assume the lead role for security across the entire country this spring, when the Taliban typically step up their attacks.

There are now about 66,000 U.S. troops in Afghanistan.

Senate panel OKs Brennan for CIA post

WASHINGTON — The Senate Intelligence Committee voted Tuesday to approve President Barack Obama's pick to lead the CIA after winning a behind-the-scenes battle with the White House over access to a series of top-secret legal opinions that justify the use of lethal drone strikes against terror suspects, including American citizens.

John Brennan's installation at the spy agency has been delayed as Senate Democrats and Republicans have pressed the Obama administration to allow a review of the classified documents prepared by the Justice Department. The senators have argued they can't perform adequate oversight without reviewing the contents of the opinions, but the White House had resisted requests for full disclosure.

The intelligence committee's chairwoman, Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., said in a statement Tuesday that the committee voted 12-3 to send Brennan's nomination to the full Senate for confirmation. The panel's deliberations were held behind closed doors. Feinstein said all eight Democrats on the committee voted yes. She did not identify the Republican senators who voted against him.

Sen. Saxby Chambliss, R-Ga., the committee vice chairman, said he voted against Brennan because he didn't think Brennan would create the kind of "trust relationship" between Congress and the CIA. He did not specify what his concerns were, however. But Chambliss said he would not encourage other Republican senators to attempt a filibuster of the nomination.

College investigates racial incidents

OVERLIN — Scrawls of racially offensive graffiti and, more recently, a report of someone wearing what looked like a Ku Klux Klan-type hooded robe on campus have shaken students at historically liberal Oberlin College, one of the nation's first universities to admit blacks.

Two students are being investigated for possible involvement in the graffiti and are facing discipline by the college, but no criminal charges have been filed, said Oberlin city Police Chief Thomas Miller.

The college canceled Monday's classes after an early morning report of someone in a white, hooded robe.

Suspect in deadly crash to surrender

NEW YORK — The suspected driver who fled the scene of a grisly crash that killed a pregnant woman, her husband and ultimately the child they were expecting was meeting with an attorney Tuesday and plans to report to police.

Julio Acevedo, 44, told the Daily News of New York that he was speeding away from a gunman who was trying to shoot at him early Sunday when the accident happened.

He said he fled the scene because he was worried he'd be killed and didn't know the couple had died until he saw it in newspapers.

Acevedo was in a BMW going at least 60 mph when he crashed into another car carrying Nachman and Raizy Glauber, both 21. They died Sunday, and their premature son died Monday.

Storm barrels through Midwest

CHICAGO — A late winter storm packing up to 10 inches of snow sent officials in weather-hardened Chicago into action Tuesday to prevent a repeat of scenes from two years ago, when hundreds of people in cars and buses were stranded on the city's marquee thoroughfare during a massive blizzard.

The storm was part of a system that started in in Montana, hit the Dakotas and Minnesota on Monday and then barreled through Wisconsin and Illinois on its way to Washington, D.C., where it was expected late Tuesday night. As the storm pushed toward the Snow covers school buses in Chicago on Tuesday. The brunt of the season's biggest storm hit Chicago just in time for the evening commute, with six inches of snow already on the ground.

Mid-Atlantic region, people there were gathering supplies and airlines were canceling flights.

Since the 2011 blizzard that dumped 20 inches on Chicago, the nation's third-largest city has had it pretty easy snow-wise. But the storm that was moving through Tuesday could end up dumping the most there since that blizzard, after a relatively mild winter last year and a slow start to this year's.

Some in Chicago were caught off guard by the last gasp from Old Man Winter.

"I thought it was just media hype," said Stacia

Kopplin, who was fleeing her financial services job shortly after noon and walking through the blast of wet snow to catch a train home to the suburbs.

Schools were closed in Minnesota, Wisconsin and Illinois, where officials urged caution on snow-slickened roads.

Jets batter city overrun by rebels

Syrian jets bombed opposition-held buildings Tuesday in the strategic northern city of Raqqa, a day after rebels overran the onetime regime stronghold and captured its provincial governor. A toppled statue of President Bashar Assad's father was defaced with graffiti reading, "Tomorrow will be better."

The rebels continued to battle pockets of government troops in Raqqa, struggling to crush the remaining resistance in the city of 500,000 people on the Euphrates River.

If successful, it would be the first major city they would completely control in the civil war.

But government airstrikes and intermittent clashes raised doubt about whether the rebels would be able to maintain their hold on Raqqa, about 120 miles east of the commercial capital of Aleppo.

EGYPT

Military control of coastal city mulled

CAIRO — A security agency headquarters was set on fire as protesters battled police for a third straight day in Port Said on Tuesday, and Egypt's Islamist president considered handing the military full control of the restive Mediterranean coastal city in a sign of the collapse of control there.

A handover to the military would be recognition of the failure of President Mohammed Morsi's government to bring calm to Port Said, which has been in turmoil since late January. Furious at the president and the security forces, residents have been waging campaign of protests.

But Morsi appeared to back down from the idea. Tuesday evening, his office issued a statement denying he had made such a decision. and underlining that the police remain "the main authority in charge of securing the city."

The reluctance to call in the military could reflect the multiple conflicting interests and rivalries in Egypt's halls of power. Morsi likely is loath to hand the generals greater authority.

The violence comes before parliamentary elections, which begin in April but which the opposition is boycotting.

U.S. musician cleared in death of teen fan

PRAGUE — A court acquitted on Tuesday the frontman of a U.S. heavy metal band of causing a teenage fan's death at a concert in the Czech Republic.

Lamb of God's Randy Blythe was charged in December in Prague with causing bodily harm to another person with lethal consequences.

Blythe was accused of pushing a 19-year-old who had climbed onto the stage during a 2010 concert at Prague's Abaton club.

The man hit the floor with his head and later died of a head injury.

Prague's Municipal court ruled Tuesday that Blythe was not guilty because what he did was not a crime, court spokeswoman Marketa Puci said.

Blythe, who had pleaded not guilty, acknowledged he pushed the teenager because the band doesn't tolerate any fans on the stage but said he was not aware of any injuries.

In its ruling, the court said the concert's organizers are to blame.

U.S., China push tougher N. Korea sanctions

By Edith M. Lederer
Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS — The world moved closer to punishing North Korea for its latest nuclear test Tuesday as the United States introduced a draft resolution, backed by China, with new sanctions aimed at reining in Pyongyang's nuclear and ballistic missile programs and preventing their export to other countries.

In response, Pyongyang threatened to cancel the 1953 cease-fire that ended the Korean War.

The draft resolution would subject North Korea "to some of the toughest sanctions imposed by the United Nations," U.S. Ambassador Susan Rice told reporters. She called the scope of the sanctions "exceptional."

The proposed resolution, worked out by Rice and China's U.N. Ambassador Li Baodong over the past three weeks, reflects the growing anger of the U.N.'s most powerful body at North Korea's defiance of three previous sanctions resolutions that demanded a halt to all nuclear and missile tests.

This one pledges additional measures if Pyongyang keeps ignoring the council with new tests, Rice said. North Korea's latest test was in February.

With the support of China, the North's closest ally, the proposed resolution is not expected to face serious opposition, though council members will send it to their capitals for review.

"We hope for unanimous adoption later this week," Rice said.

The draft resolution targets for the first time the illicit activities of North Korean diplomats, the country's illicit banking relationships and its illegal transfers of large quantities of cash, Rice said. It also adds new travel restrictions.

Hours before the U.N. meeting, and as word emerged of the U.S.-

China proposal, Pyongyang threatened to cancel the 1953 cease-fire that ended the Korean War.

Any fresh international sanctions are certain to infuriate North Korea, which has claimed the right to build nuclear weapons to deter alleged U.S. aggression.

The sanctions have been aimed at trying to derail the country's rogue nuclear weapons and ballistic missile programs. In addition to barring North Korea from testing or using nuclear or ballistic missile technology, they also ban it from importing or exporting material for these programs.

Monitor sailors to be laid to rest

■ Remains of 2 will be interred at Arlington

By Steve Szkotak
Associated Press

RICHMOND, Va. — A century and a half after the USS Monitor sank, the interment of two unknown crewmen found in the Civil War ironclad's turret is bringing together people from across the country with distant but powerful ties to those who died aboard.

The ceremony Friday at Arlington National Cemetery in Washington will include Monitor kin who believe the two sailors — whose remains were discovered in 2002 — are their ancestors, despite DNA testing that has failed to make a conclusive link. But the families stress that the interment pays homage to all 16 Union sailors who died when the ship went down, and nearly 100 people from Maine to California are expected to attend.

“When I learned they were going to do a memorial and have the burial at Arlington, it was like, ‘I can’t miss that,’” said Andy Bryan of Holden, Maine, who will travel with his daughter Margaret to the capital.

He said DNA testing found a 50 percent likelihood that Monitor crewman William Bryan, his great-great-great-uncle, was one of the two found in the summer of 2002, when the 150-ton turret was raised from the ocean floor off Cape Hatteras, N.C.

“If it’s not William Bryan, I’m OK with that,” Bryan said. “This is a once-in-a-lifetime thing, and I feel like I should be there.”

The same holds true for Diana Rambo of Fresno, Calif. She said her mother, Jane Nicklis Rowland, was told of the ceremony for Monitor crewman Jacob Nicklis a week before her death in December, at age 90. He was Rowland’s great-uncle.

COURTESY OF THE MARINERS' MUSEUM / ASSOCIATED PRESS

Rambo, too, suspects Nicklis was one of the two in the turret. “We know he was on the ship,” she said. “We know he was one of the 16.”

Two weeks ago, Navy Secretary Ray Mabus said the two probably would be the last Navy personnel from the Civil War to be buried at Arlington. He’ll speak at the interment. “It’s important we honor these brave men and all they represent as we reflect upon the significant role Monitor and her crew had in setting the course of our modern Navy,” he said.

The ceremony is scheduled on the 151st anniversary of the Battle of Hampton Roads, which took place on March 8 and 9, 1862. On the second day, the Brooklyn-made Monitor fought the CSS Virginia in the first battle between two ironclads. The Monitor was the Union’s answer to the Confederate Virginia, built on the carcass of the U.S. Navy frigate USS Merrimack. The battle of the ironclads ended in a draw.

The Monitor sank about nine months later in rough seas southeast of Cape Hatteras while under tow by the USS Rhode Island. Dubbed a “cheese box on a raft,” the Monitor was not designed for rough water.

Sixteen of the Monitor’s 62 crew members died. The crew of the Rhode Island was able to rescue about 50 people. Most of the dead were lost at sea. The wreck was discovered in 1973.

Retired Navy Capt. Barbara “Bobbie” Scholley was commanding officer of the team about 40 divers who descended to the Monitor wreck in 2002. The turret was upside down and filled with coal, sand and silt that had hardened into a solid mass. Divers chipped away until the turret could be lifted.

“We knew there was a good chance we would find sailors in the turret, because they would escape that way,” said Scholley, who will travel from her home in Annapolis, Md., for the Arlington ceremony.

“I think everybody realized, yes, this is a piece of history, but it’s more than that,” Scholley said of the mood among divers, archaeologists and others on a support barge when the remains were found.

“These are men who fought for us and died for us, and here they are and we’re bringing them home. It was very powerful.”

Scientists say baby born with HIV apparently cured

By Lauran Neergaard
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A baby born with the virus that causes AIDS appears to have been cured, scientists announced Sunday, describing the case of a child from Mississippi who’s now 2½ and has been off medication for about a year with no signs of infection.

There’s no guarantee the child will remain healthy, although sophisticated testing uncovered just traces of the virus’ genetic material still lingering. If so, it would mark only the world’s second reported cure.

Specialists say Sunday’s announcement, at a major AIDS meeting in Atlanta, offers promising clues for efforts to eliminate HIV infection in children, especially in AIDS-plagued African countries where too many babies are born with the virus.

“You could call this about as close to a cure, if not a cure, that we’ve seen,” Dr. Anthony Fauci of the National Institutes of Health, who is familiar with the findings, told The Associated Press.

A doctor gave this baby faster and stronger treatment than is usual, starting a three-drug infusion within 30 hours of birth. That was before tests confirmed the infant was infected and not just at risk from a mother whose HIV wasn’t diagnosed until she was in labor.

“I just felt like this baby was at higher-than-normal risk, and deserved our best shot,” Dr. Hannah Gay, a pediatric HIV specialist at the University of Mississippi, said in an interview.

That fast action apparently knocked out HIV in the baby’s blood before it could form hideouts in the body. Those so-called reservoirs of dormant cells usually rapidly reinfect anyone who stops medication, said Dr. Deborah Persaud of Johns Hopkins Children’s Center. She led the investigation that deemed the child “functionally cured,” meaning in long-term remission even if all traces of the virus haven’t been completely eradicated.

Next, Persaud’s team is planning a study to try to prove that, with more aggressive treatment of other high-risk babies. “Maybe we’ll be able to block this reservoir seeding,” Persaud said.

No one should stop anti-AIDS drugs as a result of this case, Fauci cautioned.

But “it opens up a lot of doors” to research if other children can be helped, he said. “It makes perfect sense what happened.”

Better than treatment is to prevent babies from being born with HIV in the first place.

About 300,000 children were born with HIV in 2011, mostly in poor countries where only about 60 percent of infected pregnant women get treatment that can keep them from passing the virus to their babies. In the U.S., such births are very rare because HIV testing and treatment long have been part of prenatal care.

“We can’t promise to cure babies who are infected. We can promise to prevent the vast majority of transmissions if the moms are tested during every pregnancy,” Gay stressed.

The only other person considered cured of the AIDS virus underwent a very different and risky kind of treatment — a bone marrow transplant from a special donor, one of the rare people who is naturally resistant to HIV.

Tanks, aircraft interact for virtual training

■ Allows Army to integrate live units, simulators, computer-generated troops

By Juan Carlos Llorca
Associated Press

FORT BLISS, Texas — More than a dozen troops carefully maneuver through overgrown shrubs, firing laser-tag rifles at the enemy as they advance on a compound in the New Mexico desert. Fifty miles away in West Texas, other soldiers in helicopter and tank simulators provide air and ground support for the virtual training exercise.

An Army supervisor watches it all unfold on a computer screen at a Fort Bliss command center. The real mission, however, comes next: a thorough, high-tech review of the soldiers' tactics.

The exercise is part of a new Army virtual program that records every aspect of training missions so soldiers can use video game-like replay to study how effectively the ground and air forces interacted. The system — a major upgrade over previous platforms that didn't fully integrate tank and helicopter communications — will be installed at posts across the U.S. and abroad.

The Integrated Training Environment is designed to cut costs, sharpen soldiers' ability to interact with various units and allow the military to more quickly train the growing ranks of troops returning from deployment. However, it's not intended to do away with live training altogether but rather, to better prepare soldiers for real-life training exercises.

"(Training gives soldiers) muscle memory through repetition ... so when we are in Iran, Syria, Africa, it's going to kick in," said Sgt. 1st Class Donald Jones, who operated a tank simulator during the exercise.

Officials say the push for more practical training operations comes at a critical time. The Pentagon's budget faced cuts as high as 13 percent in some of its accounts after Congress couldn't reach a deal to avert automatic, across-the-board spending cuts.

Mike Casey, spokesman for the Army's Combined Arms Center-Training program, said it wasn't immediately clear what impact the across-the-board cuts that took effect Friday would have on the program.

Inside the command center, dozens of computers run the simulations that can replay the entire exercise on a giant screen. The live, virtual and computer-generated forces come together seamlessly, much like the replays from video games that allow the user to rotate the images to view the mission from any angle.

By the time the drill is over, the infantry team had fired hundreds of rounds, cleared several buildings and called for artillery support, all of it recorded by ITE. Commanders can see in the replay how ground troops battled through computer-generated artillery fire while tanks battled each other a few miles away.

Some soldiers complimented the new equipment required for the system, including the lighter laser-sensors on their helmets.

"The older models were like having a TV screen in the back of my head," said Pfc. Victor Colon while his unit was debriefed by their sergeant after the drill.

Jones and his three-person crew inspected the tank simulators the day before the recent training mission, shutting the doors to the beige van-sized boxes and finding a realistic interior. Monitors show digital images of other tanks, helicopters and computer-generated enemies participating in the exercise.

A couple of miles away, helicopter pilots tested their simulators inside two trailers parked side by side. The cockpits replicate every aspect of normal helicopter controls and, for the first time, give pilots a chance to interact with tanks that aren't pre-programmed.

Each simulator is tuned into the infantry unit of 15 soldiers trying to take over the compound in Oro Grande, N.M. These soldiers wear laser-tag vests and laser-equipped rifles to keep track of who killed who and GPS-like devices that show their location to helicopter pilots and the officers directing the exercise.

The system, which currently is employed at Fort Hood and Fort Bliss, Texas, will be expanded by 2017 to 18 locations, including one in South Korea sometime this year. Eventually, the Army expects to be able to link units halfway across the world.

Some Army posts have attempted to create interactive training systems but they were not fully developed and one-time-only exercises, said Lt. Col. Shane Cipolla, who is in charge of deploying the virtual platform. Many commanders stressed the need to develop a better system for ground and air forces to train together, he said.

"This is a good tool for it," said Cipolla, standing a short distance from the troops storming the compound.

Cipolla acknowledged the spending cuts were considered as the Army pushed for an upgraded training platform that could handle more soldiers at a fraction of the cost needed to train with real helicopters and tanks. The program costs about $8 million per year in research and development, but it presents significant savings each time the Army opts for simulated missions.

Insight Broadband and telephone customers.

The website says that Insight Broadband customers in the Evansville metro area — which includes Henderson — will be moved to Time Warner Cable Internet service beginning in late April.

“After your area’s service is transitioned to TWC, the first time you try to access Time Warner Cable Internet, you will be prompted to complete a required registration process to select a new TWC Mail address and set up a new mailbox. Your new TWC Mail address will look like this: john.smith@twc.com,” the website advises.

More instructions will be provided later.

“Customers will receive a transition kit about 30 days prior to the TWC transition with more information about what they need to do to ensure a smooth migration,” according to Hogan.

Insight Broadband customers might notice some increase in speed. TWC in December said it would increase the maximum download speed of its standard Internet service by 50 percent — from 10 Mbps to 15 Mbps — and Hogan said the company will do the same for Insight customers.

Meanwhile, Insight phone service will be migrated over to Time Warner Cable. Customers’ home phone numbers won’t change, but a new voicemail box will need to be set up when that occurs.

“We will let customers know about any changes to services and we will provide them with tools they can use to learn more about the new products and services that will be available as a Time Warner Cable customer,” he said.

Additional questions and answers concerning changes to Insight cable TV, broadband, phone and billing services are available at twc.com/welcomeinsight.

“We will also provide notifications about service via mail and email,” Hogan said.

Time Warner Cable, based in New York, is one of the nation’s largest providers of cable TV, high-speed Internet and telephone services with more than 15 million customers. It ranks as the second-largest cable TV company and, behind DirecTV and Dish Network, as the fourth-largest multichannel video programming distributors overall, according to the National Cable & Telecommunications Association.

TWC picked up 760,000 customers with the completion of its acquisition of Insight Communications in February 2012. Insight serves customers in Henderson, Providence and Evansville as well as other areas in Kentucky, Indiana and Ohio.

TWC had already served significant portions of rural Henderson County as well as portions of Daviess, Union and Webster counties.

Meanwhile, TWC will also be gaining a higher profile with University of Kentucky sports fans: The company on Monday announced a multi-year sponsorship agreement with UK’s men’s basketball and football teams that will involve TWC advertising at games and on TV and radio broadcasts.

Venezuela’s President Hugo Chavez dies

Official calls for unity, tranquility and understanding

By Fabiola Sanchez and Frank Bajak Associated Press

CARACAS, Venezuela — Some in anguish, some in fear, Venezuelans raced for home on Tuesday after the government announced the death of President Hugo Chavez, the firebrand socialist who led the nation for 14 years.

Vice President Nicolas Maduro’s voice broke and tears ran down his face as he appeared on national television to announce that Chavez died at 4:25 p.m. local time (3:55 p.m EST; 1755 GMT) “after battling hard against an illness over nearly two years.”

He did not say what exactly killed Chavez, although the government had announced the previous night that a severe new respiratory infection had severely weakened him.

Just a few hours earlier, Maduro made a virulent speech against enemies he claimed were trying to undermine Venezuelan democracy.

But as he announced the death, Maduro called on Venezuelans to be “dignified inheritors of the giant man” Chavez was.

“Let there be no weakness, no violence. Let there be no hate. In our hearts there should only be one sentiment: Love. Love, peace and discipline.”

All across downtown Caracas, shops and restaurants begin closing and Venezuelans hustled for home, some even breaking into a run.

Many had looks of anguish and incredulity on their faces.

“I feel a sorrow so big I can’t speak,” said Yamilina Barrios, a 39-year-old clerk who works in the Industry Ministry, her face covered in tears.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

In this 2009 file photo, President Barack Obama, left, shakes hands with Venezuela’s President Hugo Chavez before the opening session of the 5th Summit of the Americas in Port of Spain, Trinidad and Tobago. Venezuela’s Vice President Nicolas Maduro announced on Tuesday that Chavez died at age 58 after a nearly two-year bout with cancer.

“He was the best this country had,” she said, disconsolately weeping. “I adore him.

“I hope the country calms down and continues the work that he left us, continues in unity and the progress continues,” Barrios said.

Among the nervous was Maria Elena Lovera, a 45-year-old housewife.

“I want to go home. People are crazy and are way too upset.”

In the only immediately known incident of political violence, a group of masked, helmeted men on motorcycles, some brandishing revolvers, attacked about 40 students who had been protesting for more than a week near the Supreme Court building to demand the government give more information about Chavez’s health.

The attackers, who wore no clothing identifying any political allegiance, burned the students’ tents and scattered their food just minutes after the death was announced.

“They burned everything we had,” said student leader Gaby Arellano. She said none of the attackers fired a shot but that she saw four with pistols.

Maduro called on Venezuelans to convene in the capital’s Bolivar Square, named for the 19th century independence hero Simon Bolivar, who Chavez claimed as his chief inspiration.

The vice president also called on the opposition to respect “the people’s pain.”

“Those who never supported the comandante Hugo Chavez, respect the pain of the people. This is the moment to think of our families, of our country.”

Chavez leaves behind a socialist political movement firmly in control of the nation, but with some doubt about how a new leadership will be formed.

Chavez’s illness prevented him from taking the oath of office after he was re-elected to a new term on Oct. 7 and under the constitution, National Assembly chief Diosdado Cabello apparently would take over as interim president.

But there was no sign of Cabello on the podium as Maduro announced Chavez’s death.

The constitution also says that elections should be called in 30 days. Chavez had specified that his supporters should support Maduro as his successor.

The man Chavez defeated in October, the youthful Miranda state Gov. Henrique Capriles, would be expected to represent the opposition.

Venezuela’s defense minister also appeared on television to announce that the military will remain loyal to the constitution in the wake of Chavez’s death.

Admiral Diego Molero appealed for “unity, tranquility and understanding” among Venezuelans.

Earlier in the day, Maduro used a more belligerent tone as he announced the government had expelled two U.S. diplomats from the country and said “we have no doubt” that Chavez’s cancer, which was first diagnosed in June 2011, was induced by “the historical enemies of our homeland.”

He compared the situation to the death of the Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat, claiming Arafat was “inoculated with an illness.”

Chavez’s inner circle has long claimed the United States was behind a failed 2002 attempt to overthrow him, and he has frequently played the anti-American card to stir up support. Venezuela has been without a U.S. ambassador since July 2010.

Maduro has been taking on a larger role since Chavez urged Venezuelans to choose him as president before disappearing in early December to undergo a fourth round of cancer surgery in Cuba.

He accused U.S. Embassy’s Air Force attache Col. David Delmonaco of spying on Venezuela’s military and seeking to involve officers in “destabilizing projects.”

Maduro gave Delmonaco 24 hours to leave, and U.S. officials said he had already departed the country.

Maduro said Tuesday that the government was “on the trail of other elements that figure in this entire venomous scenario and are seeking to stir up trouble.”

While information pertaining to the boil advisory was published via The Gleaner and broadcast on WSON and 14 News WFIE, Moore said customers said they never heard the notification because they don’t subscribe to the paper, listen to the radio or watch that particular channel.

Each customer has a phone number on record, so Moore thought a OneCall service could be another and possibly more effective notification method.

“I’m just trying to find the best way to get a hold of people,” he said.

There are different price ranges depending on how many calls per year are purchased: $3,060 for 50,000 calls; $4,200 for 75,000 calls; and $5,100 for 100,000 calls.

Moore noted that the district’s customers could be broken up into sub-units so the OneCall wouldn’t go out to all customers each time a call was placed.

The commissioners have asked Moore to talk with other water districts to see what they were doing and bring it back before the commission at a future meeting.

Gov. Beshear vows pension system solution

Special session may be necessary

By Roger Alford Associated Press

FRANKFORT — Gov. Steve Beshear pledged Tuesday to get a measure passed this year to shore up the state’s pension system for government retirees, even if it means calling a special legislative session to do it.

The Democratic-controlled House and the Republican-led Senate are at odds over competing proposals for restoring solvency to the pension system, which has a $33 billion unfunded liability.

“I’m confident that the House and Senate are sincere in their desire to resolve this issue,” Beshear told reporters in his Capitol briefing room.

The Senate proposal would create a 401(k)-like hybrid retirement plan for new employees. The House opposes that idea. The House wants to generate money for pensions from the state lottery and from horse racing tracks. But the Senate is balking at that proposal.

A revenue bill passed by the House and now stalled in the Senate calls for the state lottery to add Keno and some new online games to generate revenue for the pensions. It also calls for tax revenue from slot-like devices, called Instant Racing machines, at horse tracks to be designated for pensions.

House Speaker Greg Stumbo said that could net $100 million a year, roughly the amount of additional money Kentucky needs to make its annual pension contribution.

In Kentucky, actual slots are banned, but two horse tracks have installed the Instant Racing machines. Players wager on the outcomes of past horse races, without knowing where they took place or who won. The machines spawned a legal challenge that is now pending before the Kentucky Supreme Court.

Lawmakers have been bouncing around several ideas to raise money for pensions, though most have been rejected. A proposal to increase the state’s cigarette tax from 60 cents to $1 a pack fell to the wayside last month.

Beshear acknowledged Tuesday that the pension issue is a tough one.

“Whether it’s resolved in this current session or not I think is still up in the air,” the Democratic governor said. “But one way or the other this year, we’re going to resolve this pension issue, because I think all of us understand we’ve got to resolve that and get it out of the way for Kentucky to move forward.”

Stumbo said Tuesday that there’s been no movement on the issue since last week. That didn’t dash Beshear’s optimism. He said the House and Senate are committed to finding a solution.

“So, I think as long as all of us have that attitude, we will eventually resolve this pension issue,” Beshear said. “We’re going to keep talking and see where things go.”

Beshear had also pressed for tax reform this year, but lawmakers have made no headway on that issue. The governor didn’t say he would put that issue on a special session agenda.

“We’ll see,” he said.

“We’re really excited about the opportunity to have this program, so if anybody needs some future lawyers or future police officers, you can look our way next year,” she said. “A lot of good people will be looking for a chance to shadow some of you.”

The idea is to bring the kids into closer contact with the community, Sewell said. It also gives students the opportunity to see if their expectations for criminal law careers match reality.

“There is a difference between what kids think criminal law work is like and what it actually is,” he said. “Students can test out their skill sets and see what works and what doesn’t.”

Lady Cols off to state!

■ Henderson County holds off UHA 49-47 to claim region crown

By Kevin Patton

PRINCETON, Ky. — It's back to state for Henderson County.

The Lady Colonels (26-2) rallied from a 12-point first-half deficit to beat University Heights 49-47 in the final of the Second Region Tournament at Caldwell County.

The school's 10th region title gives Henderson County its first trip to the state tournament since 2010.

"I'm really proud of these kids. They battled back tonight and they really wanted it," Henderson County coach Jeff Haile said. "It's not easy to come out here and win the region."

"I'm so proud of my team. We've worked so hard since day one. This has been our goal since conditioning," said Ellie Fruit, one of the team's two seniors. "It's an amazing feeling to accomplish it."

"We wanted to win it for Ellie and Brooke (Tapp). We wanted to send them off in a good way," said sophomore Maci Brown. "It feels really awesome."

Trailing 22-10 late in the second quarter, it was a technical foul on Haile that turned the game's momentum. The second-half shooting of Brown kept that momentum in the Lady Colonels' corner.

Haile, who was guided Henderson County to all 10 of its regional championships, was whistled for a technical following a non-call on a defensive rebound by DeAsia Outlaw. "They pushed our player out of bounds and nothing was called," he said. "I'm glad it fired our team up, but I didn't plan it. I was just into the game."

"It fired us up. We all got in huddle and regrouped," Fruit said.

The Lady Colonels scored the last eight points of the half. Five of those came from Kacie Wallace, who hit a 3-pointer then was fouled after a steal and made two free throws.

"I backed them up. They backed me up," Haile said of the technical.

Despite another poor first-half shooting performance (7-of-34), Henderson County took the momentum into the break.

"In the lockerroom Coach Haile said, 'We're not backing down from anybody' and we didn't," said Fruit, who finished with 10 points.

After the teams traded baskets for a while in the third quarter, Brown took control on the offense. She followed a Fruit 3-pointer with 13 straight points including three 3-pointers of her own. Brown's second trifecta gave Henderson County its first lead at 33-32 with 2:25 to go in the period.

"I knew it was a matter of time. I told her, 'Keep shooting. They're not coming out on you. Just take your time.'" Haile said.

"I took my time and got my feet set," said Brown, who hit five 3-pointers and scored all 19 her points in the second half. "We finally got used to the goals. They're really bouncy."

A putback by Cache Richardson to end the third quarter provided the only points for UHA in an 18-2 run by Henderson County. Brown hit two more 3-pointers early in the fourth quarter to increase the lead to 44-34 with 3:59 to go.

With the help of a couple of turnovers, UHA made one last charge by scoring seven unanswered points.

Brown also had the defensive highlight of the game, as the 5-7 guard blocked the shot of 6-5 center Meg Starling to keep the lead at three. "She didn't shot fake or anything, I just timed it right," Brown said.

Demetria Snorten's 3-pointer with 0:34 to go pulled the Lady Blazers within one at 45-44, but Henderson County hit 4-of-6 free throws the rest of the way to stay in front.

UHA scored the game's final points on a driving basket by DeNayia Holmes with four seconds to go, but the Blazers were out of timeouts. Henderson County did not inbound the ball and time expired.

Holmes led UHA with 14 points, while Richardson had 10 points and 10 rebounds. Starling had nine points, 10 rebounds and eight blocked shots but was less of a factor in the second half.

"We bodied her up and tried to run her a little more to get her tired," Haile said.

Starling's 6-5 frame changed the way the Lady Colonels attacked the basket.

"It really affected our whole game. We knew if we were going to drive in she was going to be there," Brown said. "It really slowed us down and made us more timid."

Henderson County will play either second-ranked Anderson County (32-1) or Simon Kenton (29-5) in the first round of the state tournament Wednesday, March 13 at 6:30 p.m. at Diddle Arena in Bowling Green. The Eighth Region final was postponed until tonight because of snow in the central Kentucky area.

Buckeyes knock off No. 2 Indiana

Wire reports

Deshaun Thomas and Aaron Craft scored nine of Ohio State's points in a decisive 11-2 run, leading the 14th-ranked Buckeyes past No. 2 Indiana 67-58 on Tuesday night.

Thomas finished with 18 points and Craft added 15 as the Buckeyes (22-7, 12-5 Big Ten) won their fourth straight.

Indiana had big plans for Senior Night.

After clinching a share of its conference league title in 11 years with losses by Michigan State and Wisconsin on Sunday, the Hoosiers (25-5, 13-4) were trying to claim their first outright Big Ten crown since 1993. They will have another chance Sunday at No. 7 Michigan.

Cody Zeller scored 17 points and Christian Watford added 12 but the Hoosiers weren't themselves.

■ Missouri 93, Arkansas 63: Laurence Bowers had 24 points and 11 rebounds in his final home game, contributing to a rough evening for old coach Mike Anderson's first appearance as a visitor and helping Missouri finish unbeaten at home with a 93-63 rout over Arkansas on Tuesday night.

Fellow senior Jabari Brown helped finish off the Razorbacks early with 13 of his 23 points in a dominant first half with the Tigers (22-8-11-6 SEC) leading 48-22. The third senior, Alex Oriakhi, had 10 points and eight rebounds and topped 1,000 career rebounds.

BJ Young had 27 points for Arkansas (18-12, 9-8), which shot just 31 percent in the first half while going 1 for 15 from 3-point range. The Razorbacks surrendered a season high in points.

■ Duke 85, Virginia Tech 57: Seth Curry scored 20 points in his final home game and No. 3 Duke pulled away to beat Virginia Tech 85-57.

Fellow senior Ryan Kelly added 18 points in his second straight strong performance since coming back from an injury for the Blue Devils (26-4, 13-4 Atlantic Coast Conference).

■ Marquette 60, Rutgers 54: Jamil Wilson scored all 10 of his points in the second half, including the late 3-pointer that put No. 15 Marquette ahead for good, and the Golden Eagles rallied for a 60-54 victory over Rutgers.

Vander Blue had 22 points and made two game-sealing free throws with 13.9 seconds left for Marquette (22-7, 13-4 Big East).

■ Notre Dame 66, St. John's 40: Jerian Grant had 21 points and eight assists, Eric Atkins added 15 points and No. 24 Notre Dame held St. John's to 18 percent shooting in the second half in a 66-40 victory.

■ Kansas St. 79, TCU 68: Angel Rodriguez had 21 points and 10 assists and Shane Southwell and Martavious Irving both added 15 points as No. 9 Kansas State beat TCU 79-68.

■ Mississippi 87, Alabama 83: Marshall Henderson scored 24 points, LaDarius White added 17 and Mississippi beat Alabama

DARON CUMMINGS/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ohio State's Evan Ravenel (30) has his shot blocked by Indiana's Will Sheehey during the first half of their game on Tuesday night in Bloomington, Ind. Ohio State won 67-58.

87-83 on Tuesday night.

Ole Miss (22-8, 11-6 Southeastern Conference) won eight of nine home games in conference play.

■ Iowa 63, Illinois 55: Devyn Marble scored 21 points and Iowa beat Illinois 63-55 on Tuesday night for its fifth win in seven games.

Wildcats profiled in documentary

LEXINGTON — Kentucky’s basketball tradition will be the subject an upcoming documentary.

The Wildcats are featured in a Turner Sports special entitled Bluegrass Kingdom: The Gospel of Kentucky Basketball, an hour-long look at notable periods and figures in the program’s history.

Debuting March 17 on TruTV after the 68-team NCAA tournament field is selected, the show also features interviews with Kentucky coach John Calipari and former players such as Miami Heat president Pat Riley and Michael Kidd-Gilchrist, who helped earn the school’s eighth championship last spring.

Starting with Kentucky’s rise to prominence under Adolph Rupp, the documentary examines the racial and historical significance of Texas Western’s 1966 championship upset of the Wildcats with an all-Black starting lineup. The tenures of Joe B. Hall, Eddie Sutton, Rick Pitino and Calipari are also profiled.

Bills linebacker Merriman retires

BUFFALO, N.Y. — Linebacker Shawne Merriman is calling it “Lights Out” on his career, announcing on his website that he plans to retire.

In a message posted Tuesday night on shawne-merriman.com, the player wrote he is electing to retire on his own terms, saying he will “leave while I know I can still physically play the game.”

Merriman’s decision comes a week before he was eligible to become a free agent, and after spending parts of the past three seasons in Buffalo. Last year, he was cut by the Bills in August before re-signing with them in October.

He’s a three-time Pro Bowl selection and the NFL’s 2005 defensive rookie of the year. Merriman’s best seasons came with San Diego, where he earned the nickname “Lights Out” for being one of the league’s top pass-rushers.

Dayne, Tomlinson head Hall ballot

NEW YORK — Heisman Trophy winner Ron Dayne, the late Jerome Brown and LaDainian Tomlinson are on the final ballot for College Football Hall of Fame for the first time.

The National Football Foundation on Tuesday announced the 77 former players and five former coaches who will be considered for induction.

The ballot is distributed to the more than 12,000 NFF members and current Hall of Famers. The votes are tabulated and submitted to the 14-member NFF’s honors court, which selects the class.

Dayne is the career rushing leader in major college football and won the Heisman for Wisconsin in 1999. Tomlinson won the Doak Walker Award as the nation’s best running back in 2000 for TCU. Brown anchored the defensive line for the great Miami teams of the mid-1980s.

OKC’s Ibaka fined $25,000 for hit

NEW YORK — Oklahoma City forward Serge Ibaka has been fined $25,000 by the NBA for striking Blake Griffin of the Los Angeles Clippers in the groin area during Sunday’s game.

NBA executive vice president for basketball operations Stu Jackson announced the fine Tuesday. The league also upgraded the flagrant foul 1 Ibaka’s was given for hitting Griffin as the two battled for position in the paint to a Flagrant Foul 2, meaning Ibaka should have been ejected from the game.

The incident occurred with 1:52 remaining in the fourth quarter of the Thunder’s 108-104 win over the Clippers at Staples Center.

SEC coaches predict upsets

■ Women’s tournament includes six teams ranked in the Top 25

By Charles Odum
Associated Press

DULUTH, Ga. — The six Southeastern Conference teams ranked in the Top 25 should be wary of upsets in this week’s women’s tournament.

And with good reason — there’s no reason the tournament should be any different than the regular season.

Most of the ranked teams, including No. 9 Tennessee, the SEC’s regular-season champion and top seed in the tournament, lost at least once to an unranked team during the 16-game conference schedule. Unranked Missouri beat the Lady Vols.

No. 12 Georgia, the No. 3 seed, lost at Mississippi State. No. 19 Texas A&M, the fourth seed, lost its last three, including to Vanderbilt and then-unranked LSU.

Kentucky coach Matthew Mitchell says that is just life in the SEC.

No. 7 Kentucky (25-4, 13-3) earned the No. 2 seed by closing the regular season with a win over Tennessee. Mitchell said winning the SEC tournament “is one of the greatest accomplishments in basketball.”

“I’m so impressed with the quality of depth in the Southeastern Conference,” Mitchell said. “I really think it’s the best league in the country. I believe you could have lower seeds beating higher seeds. I absolutely believe that is possible.”

Mitchell named LSU, the sixth seed which moved into the Top 25 at No. 22 this week, and unranked Vanderbilt as possible surprise teams which could win the tournament.

“I don’t know if there’s a clear-cut favorite,” Mitchell said.

The other ranked team in the tournament is No. 17 South Carolina.

Kentucky’s A’dia Mathies (1) shoots next to Tennessee’s Taber Spani (13) and Cierra Burdick during the first half of their game at Memorial Coliseum in Lexington on Sunday. The seventh-ranked Lady Wildcats are seeded second in this week’s SEC women’s tournament.

The tournament begins Wednesday night when Alabama, which lost its last 10 regular-season games, plays Mississippi State.

Only 13 of the league’s 14 teams are participating. Mississippi (9-20, 2-14) announced a self-imposed postseason ban on Nov. 9. Coach Adrian Wiggins and two assistants were fired after a school investigation found academic and recruiting misconduct.

Tennessee beat LSU in last year’s tournament championship game after Kentucky won the regular-season title.

The Lady Vols (23-6, 14-2 SEC) won the regular-season title in their first season with coach Holly Warlick. She spent the last 27 years as an assistant on Pat Summitt’s staffs.

Summitt led the Lady Vols to eight national titles in 38 seasons. She stepped down last April after announcing in 2011 she had early-onset dementia.

The regular-season championship under Warlick was a strong statement of Tennessee’s continued strength in the post-Summitt era.

“I’m never going to compare myself to Pat Summitt,” Warlick said. “There’s only one Pat Summitt.

“I just want this team to get better. I have an unbelievable staff. I think one thing that Pat did teach me is surround yourself with quality people.”

The Lady Vols have injury concerns this week.

Point guard Ariel Mas-sengale and center Isabelle Harrison have knee injuries. Warlick said senior guard Kamiko Williams sprained both ankles in the loss to Kentucky.

“Both of them,” Warlick said when asked about Williams’ injuries. “That’s hard to do but she found a way to do it.”

Warlick said she did not know if Harrison will be able to return for the tournament. She said Massengale is “a little sore” and is confident Williams “will bounce back.”

LSU is the league’s hottest team. The Lady Tigers (19-10, 10-6) closed the regular season with six straight wins, including the 67-52 win at No. 13 Texas A&M.

LSU will play Auburn on Thursday night and will have to play on four straight days to win the tournament. The top four seeds have byes until Friday’s quarterfinals.

“Our chances are about as good as anyone else’s,” said second-year LSU coach Nikki Caldwell, the former Tennessee player and assistant.

“I know everybody in this conference knows how tough it is to win here. We beat up on each other all year long. We’ve been able to get hot at the right time.”

Canes have chance to clinch in ACC

By Steven Wine
Associated Press

CORAL GABLES, Fla. — Last fall, when Miami Hurricanes basketball still operated in the shadows of the football program, coach Jim Larranaga dropped in on a meeting of university officials and predicted a big season for his team.

“I went to the board of trustees,” Larranaga recalls, “and I said, ‘I’m the basketball coach. I don’t know if you guys know that or not. But we’re going to have perhaps the best season in school history.’”

Larranaga was right. The Hurricanes cracked the Top 25 in late January, climbed to a school-record No. 2 a month later and have earned at least a share of their first Atlantic Coast Conference championship with two games to go, both at home.

That ensures plenty of motivation for Miami to bounce back quickly from Saturday’s thrilling but wrenching loss at Duke.

“These kids are pretty resilient,” Larranaga says. “They know we’ve got a lot more basketball ahead of us.”

Now ranked No. 6, the Hurricanes (23-5, 14-2) play Georgia Tech on Wednesday and Clemson on Saturday. Win either game, and they clinch their first outright league basketball title.

Miami would also clinch with a loss by second-place Duke against Virginia Tech on Tuesday night.

Larranaga says that while he and his coaches expected such success from the senior-laden team, his players needed some convincing. A road victory Jan. 10 against North Carolina did the job.

“When we won at Carolina, I could see everything changed,” Larranaga says. “They really believed that if we were good enough to win at Chapel Hill, we should be good enough to win anywhere.”

They went on to win their first 13 league games before losing at Wake Forest. While the Hurricanes have now dropped two consecutive road games, they’re 13-0 in Coral Gables, where six seniors will play for the final time this week.

“It’s pretty exciting, but sad at the same time,” senior guard Durand Scott says. “The best thing I can do at this point is get two wins in this building.”

For a change, the Hurricanes enjoy a considerable home-court advantage thanks to their burgeoning bandwagon. A succession of sellout crowds transformed the traditionally sleepy gym into a raucous environment.

“It has been great to see those stands filled up, and everybody cheering for you really gives you a lot of energy,” junior guard Rion Brown says. “I hope they do it for the last two games for the seniors.”

Brown, the son of former Georgia Tech player Tico Brown, came off the bench to score a career-high 22 points when Miami beat the Yellow Jackets 62-49 in January. That game marked the start of a conference season that has been a disappointment for the Yellow Jackets (15-13, 5-11).

“We expect them to give us their hardest,” Brown says. “We’ve had that target on our back this whole year. We definitely expect their best, so we have to get ready to give them our best.”

The Hurricanes know the time is near to be at their peak.

“We’re healthy; we’re playing well,” Larranaga says. “But I think we can play better than we have. We’re not done yet. We can get better.”

UK’s Mathies repeats as SEC women’s player of year

Wire reports

A’dia Mathies is the Southeastern Conference’s player of the year again, though the Kentucky senior guard shares this award with Tennessee’s Meghan Simmons.

Mathies leads three Wildcats on the all-SEC teams announced Tuesday. The preseason pick to repeat as the conference’s top player, the Louisville native averaged 16.0 points, 4.5 rebounds and 2.3 assists per game this season and became Kentucky’s No. 2 career scorer.

Forward DeNesha Stallworth (12.5 points, 6.0 rebounds) also made the first team in voting by the league’s 14 coaches. Forward Samarie Walker (9.5 points, 8.6 rebounds, team-high 46 blocks) made the second team along with the league’s All-Defensive team.

Tennessee’s Holly Warlick is the SEC coach of the year after replacing Pat Summitt and leading the Lady Vols to a league regular-season title in her inaugural season.

■ Ian Clark of Belmont and Isaiah Canaan of Murray State have been named the Ohio Valley Conference players of the year, while Rick Byrd of Belmont has been honored as the league’s coach of the year.

Clark also was named the defensive player of the year after helping Belmont go 14-2 and win the OVC regular season title in its first year in the league. Clark ranks third nationally shooting 46.2 percent from 3-point range.

Canaan ranks eighth nationally averaging 21.6 points per game.

■ Jasmine Newsome of Tennessee Martin has been named the Ohio Valley Conference’s women’s player of the year, and the junior guard also is the league’s defensive player of the year.

Newsome averaged a league-high 21.9 points per game for the Skyhawks.

Lee Buchanan of Eastern Illinois has been named coach of the year after leading the Panthers to a 19-10 record earning their second OVC regular season title.

Erika Sisk of Murray State has been named the OVC freshman of the year.

■ Creighton’s Doug McDermott is the Missouri Valley Conference’s player of the year for the second straight season.

McDermott leads the Valley and is second nationally with 23.4 points a game.

Creighton’s Ethan Wragge is the Valley’s sixth man of the year, Wichita State’s Cleanthony Early is the top newcomer, Missouri State’s Marcus Marshall the top freshman and Bradley’s Dyricus Simms-Edwards the top defensive player.

McDermott and Early are joined on the all-conference first team by Illinois State’s Jackie Carmichael, Indiana State’s Jake Odum and Evansville’s Colt Ryan.

Big East football keeping $100m

By Ralph D. Russo
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Big East football schools will get almost all of a $110 million pot in a deal that will allow seven departing basketball schools to keep the name Big East and start playing in their own conference next season, a person familiar with the negotiations says.

The person spoke to The Associated Press on condition of anonymity because the separation agreement has not yet been finalized. That is likely to happen by the end of the week. The football schools will receive approximately $100 million under the agreement, most of which will go to holdover members Connecticut, South Florida and Cincinnati.

The basketball schools will receive $10 million, the Big East name and the right to play their conference tournament at Madison Square Garden.

The Big East’s stash of cash has built up in recent years through a combination of exit fees, entry fees and money the league’s members earned in the NCAA men’s basketball tournament. Since 2011, the Big East has lost 16 schools that were either members or dropped out before playing a game. That figure includes the seven Catholic basketball schools.

The so-called Catholic 7, which is expected to add at least two more members before it begins competition in the 2013-14 school year, is made up of Georgetown, St. John’s, Villanova, Seton Hall, Providence, Marquette and DePaul. The new Big East has a television deal from Fox waiting for it, though it still needs to hire a commissioner and set up a league office.

Joining South Florida, Connecticut, Cincinnati and Temple, which rejoined the Big East last year for football, in the to-be-named-later conference in 2013 will be Memphis, Central Florida, SMU and Houston. East Carolina and Tulane are set to join in 2014 and Navy is scheduled to join for football in 2015.

New Fox sports network to debut

Regis Philbin, right, jokes with Terry Bradshaw during a news conference about Fox's new sports network in New York on Tuesday. Philbin will host a weekday sports talk show for the network's new channel Fox Sports 1.

That will be the case for any rights deals that come along; there aren't many, with long-term pacts now the norm. NBC and CBS already have their own cable sports networks, and Turner is also a factor. Fox Sports co-President Eric Shanks mentioned the NBA, Big Ten and U.S. Open tennis as appealing properties whose contracts expire in the next several years.

FS1 has two main challenges, he said. One is producing enough alluring live events to draw viewers, and he thinks the network is already in good shape to do that. The other is inertia: Fans accustomed to tuning to ESPN must be persuaded to switch to a different network.

"People need to over time feel like there's a channel number in their head that they can go to as an alternative to one of the more powerful sports channels out there," he said.

Will they watch nightly highlights on something other than "SportsCenter"? FS1 will try to find out with its own news show, which will look more like Fox's NFL pregame coverage than ESPN's cornerstone program.

"We like our position," ESPN spokesman Josh Krulewitz said. "We have always had vigorous competition so there is really nothing substantially new here. Others are, however, beginning to recognize what we have long known:

The power of live sports, especially in light of technological advances, is substantial and brings tremendous value in today's entertainment landscape."

ESPN has eight cable networks that combine for almost 30,000 hours of live coverage.

FS1 will be converted from Speed TV, a motor-sports network, and will be available in 90 million homes, compared with almost 99 million for ESPN and ESPN2.

And in what might seem odd for a company known for drawing a young audience, Regis Philbin will host a weekday sports talk show for the new network. The 81-year-old Philbin jokingly pretended to be hard of hearing when questions came up about this at the press conference.

Wanger noted that "Live! With Regis and Kelly" did well in younger demographics before Philbin left that show in late 2011.

"Regis has appeal from young to old," Wanger said. "That's why we want him."

Fox plans to use its "double box" format for showing commercials during live action for sports events. Kicking off the coverage on Aug. 17 will be a NASCAR Camping World Truck Series race from Michigan and a UFC event in prime time.

McIlroy's way out of mess is to be like Tiger Woods

DORAL, Fla. — The statement released by his handlers was almost as bad as the kid's decision to walk out on the tournament.

It was the first big mistake of his career, at a time when the golf world was enthralled by such a young talent. He was criticized by the press and by his peers for his selfish behavior, though there was hope that he at least would learn from his mistake.

This was Tiger Woods, 1996.

In his fourth straight PGA Tour event since turning pro, the 20-year-old Woods effectively locked up a spot on tour with his tie for third in the B.C. Open. The next week he had another sponsor's exemption to the Buick Challenge. Woods showed up at Callaway Gardens before abruptly leaving town, and IMG released a statement that he was exhausted. It looked even worse when Woods didn't even stick around for the Fred Haskins Award dinner to honor him as college player of the year.

Eleven days later, Woods won in Las Vegas and all was forgotten.

That's the best way out for Rory McIlroy. Good golf goes a long way.

McIlroy laid the foundation for seeking forgiveness in a 25-minute telephone interview Sunday night with Sports Illustrated. He said what everyone else suspected: It was frustration over his game and not pain from his wisdom tooth that led him to walk out on the Honda Classic just eight holes into his second round. He was 7-over par, and with his second shot in the water on No. 18, it was about to get worse.

So he turned in his scorecard and bolted for the parking lot.

"What I should have done is take my drop, chip it on, try to make a 5 and play my hardest on the back nine, even if I shot 85," McIlroy told the magazine. "What I did was not good for the tournament, not good for the kids and the fans who were out there watching me. It was not the right thing to do."

Expect to hear much of the same when he speaks Wednesday at Doral.

He was practicing at The Bear's Club just hours after he withdrew from the Honda Classic. Ernie Els saw him "practicing his tail off" all weekend, and then McIlroy played Monday afternoon in the Pro-Member tournament at Seminole. They spoke privately. That's all the Big Easy would share.

"We'll see what he says tomorrow," Els said.

It really doesn't matter.

Most reasonable people know by now that Boy Wonder made a boyish blunder. Jack Nicklaus weighed in by saying if only McIlroy had waited five more minutes, he would have thought the better of leaving. There's nothing McIlroy can do to change that now, and nothing he can say that will change anyone's opinion.

"When it comes to being where he's at, you've got to maybe think a little bit more than two minutes," Els said. "In a couple of years' time, he won't even think about this or talk about this. If he wins this week, it will be the last thing we talk about. It will be history, and that's what it should be. It's something that's happened and we should move on from that. He's a great kid. He's a great player. And if he admits he's made a mistake, then that's that, and let's move on."

■ Fox Sports 1 slated to launch in August as challenger to ESPN

By Rachel Cohen
Associated Press

NEW YORK — For anyone who thinks TV is already saturated with sports of every stripe, stay tuned.

Here comes Fox with an in-your-face challenge to ESPN — a 24-hour sports cable network called Fox Sports 1, set to launch Aug. 17.

"ESPN, quite frankly, is a machine," Fox Sports executive vice president Bill Wanger said Tuesday in announcing the venture. "They have very consistent ratings, obviously huge revenue. We're coming in trying to take on the establishment. It's no different than Fox News or Fox Broadcasting back in the '80s. We're going to have to scratch and claw our way all the way to the top."

To do that, Fox executives are confident they have enough live events, with rights to college basketball and football, NASCAR, soccer and UFC fights. In its first year, the new network will broadcast nearly 5,000 hours of competition and news.

Fox owns rights to many Big 12, Pac-12 and Conference USA basketball and football games. Its soccer deals include UEFA Champions League and the men's and women's World Cups from 2015-22.

Starting in 2014, FS1 will start broadcasting Major League Baseball games, including part of the post-season. It will show some NASCAR Sprint Cup Series races as early as 2015, with other NASCAR events on the air from the startup.

"We believe we've amassed enough live events and can package and put programming around it where we can have scale," Fox Sports co-President Randy Freer said. "We can have significance. We can be a major player in the market."

However, unlike ESPN's lineup, there's no NBA, no SEC football, no ACC basketball and, the biggest attraction of all, no NFL games. On that last point, Wanger was quick to add: "Yet."

Still to be determined is whether the NFL sells some Thursday night games separately from its NFL Network package. If it does, everyone will try to buy a piece of the action.

U.S. team plays to 4-4 tie with White Sox

■ Teixeira injures arm, will miss WBC

Wire reports

The U.S. team played to a 4-4 tie with the Chicago White Sox on Tuesday afternoon in Glendale, Ariz., in the first of its two exhibition games leading up to the start of the World Baseball Classic.

It was still a losing afternoon for the Americans.

First baseman Mark Teixeira will miss the tournament after straining his right forearm while swinging in the batting cage before the game. Yankees manager Joe Girardi said in Tampa, Fla., that X-rays on Teixeira's hand and wrist area came back negative.

It was unclear who would replace him on the U.S. team.

Giancarlo Stanton drove in three runs and Ryan Braun went 3 for 4 for the U.S., which opens pool play Friday night against Mexico.

Gordon Beckham went 3 for 3 with an RBI for the White Sox.

United States catcher Joe Mauer, right, tags out the Chicago White Sox's Dayan Viciedo trying to score from second on a single by Gordon Beckham in the fourth inning of their exhibition game on Tuesday in Glendale, Ariz.

■ Team USA manager Joe Torre firmed up his starting pitching for the first round of the World Baseball Classic on Tuesday, slating R.A. Dickey against Mexico, Ryan Vogelsong against Italy and Derek Holland against Canada.

Torre had already said Dickey would pitch the opener in Pool D on Friday night, but he wanted to see how Vogelsong came out of a spring appearance for the Giants before finalizing the rest.

Vogelsong will start Saturday against Italy. That allows Holland, a left-hander, to face a Canadian lineup stocked with left-handed hitters on Sunday.

Torre said he'll err on the side of caution when it comes to pitch counts. WBC rules limit starters to 65 pitches in opening round games.

■ Major League Baseball intends to expand the use of instant replay for the 2014 season and will be studying over the course of this year which calls to review and how to do it.

Torre, an MLB executive vice president, said Tuesday that league officials plan to visit Miami during the World Baseball Classic and various spring training sites to examine camera angles and other factors that will help them develop a plan.

"We're going to increase replay next year. We just don't know how we're going to go about it yet," Torre said.

"I know we're using a number of venues to see what make sense," Torre said, "and it's really making sense with the rhythm of the game as a priority."

■ Albert Pujols hit a pair of groundouts and struck out in his first spring training appearance of the year for the Los Angeles Angels, a 6-4 win Tuesday over the Cincinnati Reds.

The three-time MVP, recovering from offseason surgery on his right knee, hit a broken-bat grounder to third in the first against Mike Leake, struck out swinging in the fourth versus Aroldis Chapman and grounded to shortstop in the sixth against Wilkin De La Rosa.

About 10 days ahead of the schedule the Angels had anticipated, Pujols was the designated hitter and batted third.

The Los Angeles lineup included its projected starting outfield for the first time: Mike Trout in left, Peter Bourjos in center and Josh Hamilton in right field. They combined to go 4 for 8.

Jay Bruce hit a pair of solo homers for the Reds, off Tommy Hanson in the second and Scott Downs in the fourth.

Hanson made his first spring training start for the Angels and allowed one run and three hits in two innings. Leake, making his second appearance, gave up four hits in three scoreless innings. Chapman allowed a home run to Howie Kendrick.

■ St. Louis Cardinals shortstop Rafael Furcal is getting a second opinion on his ailing elbow.

General manager John Mozeliak said Furcal would be examined Wednesday by Dr. James Andrews.

The 35-year-old Furcal is out indefinitely after re-injuring the elbow he hurt late last season. Furcal and the team elected to try rehab rather than reconstructive surgery in the offseason.

The Cardinals also have Pete Kozma, who stepped in last fall as a rookie, and offseason pickup Ronny Cedeno at shortstop.

Fish set for comeback after six months away

By Beth Harris
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES— Mardy Fish eased his way back into big-time tennis with an exhibition match against top-ranked Novak Djokovic. The real test comes this week in the Southern California desert.

The 32nd-ranked American returns to the ATP Tour after a six-month absence caused by a heart condition Fish has yet to fully reveal.

It will be a cautious first step back into the whirlwind of travel, late-night matches, erratic eating and pressure. Fish, a former top-10 player, has been off the tour since September and has changed his lifestyle significantly — healthy eating and bedtime before 10 p.m.

But he was up late Monday night after losing to Djokovic in a tiebreaker of their eight-game pro set at the Los Angeles Tennis Challenge, an exhibition Fish put together with pal and former pro Justin Gimelstob.

"I don't feel 100 percent but I'm getting pretty close," the 31-year-old Fish said from a massage table as he was put through various contortions by his physical therapist. "We were playing pretty quick. I was getting winded. You can't duplicate that in practice."

"He looked quite good on court," Djokovic said. "He was moving well and serving well."

Fish will find out exactly how well his game holds up at the BNP Paribas Open in Indian Wells, Calif., a two-week hard-court event featuring the world's top players. He's been idle since withdrawing from the U.S. Open in early September on a doctor's advice, hours before he was to face Roger Federer in the fourth round.

Fish's health woes first surfaced a year ago this month, when his heart started racing uncontrollably after a match at Key Biscayne, Fla. In May, doctors induced extreme palpitations to try to pinpoint the problem in Fish's heart.

Dow hits record, erasing Great Recession loss

By BERNARD CONDON
AP business writer

NEW YORK — The stock market is back.

Five and a half years after the start of a frightening drop that erased $11 trillion from stock portfolios and made investors despair of ever getting their money back, the Dow Jones industrial average has regained all the losses suffered during the Great Recession and reached a new high. The blue-chip index rose 125.95 points Tuesday and closed at 14,253.77, topping the previous record of 14,164.53 on Oct. 9, 2007, by 89.24 points.

“It signals that things are getting back to normal,” says Nicolas Colas, chief market strategist at BNY ConvergeX, a brokerage. “Unemployment is too high, economic growth too sluggish, but stocks are anticipating improvement.”

The new record suggests that investors who did not panic and sell their stocks in the 2008-2009 financial crisis have fully recovered.

Those who have reinvested dividends or added to their holdings have done even better. Since bottoming at 6,547.05 on March 9, 2009, the Dow has risen 7,706.72 points or 118 percent.

The Dow record does not include the impact of inflation. Adjusted for that, the Dow would have to reach 15,502 to match its old record.

The Standard and Poor’s 500, a broader index, closed at 1,539.79, 25.36 points from its record.

The last time the Dow was this high, George W. Bush still had another year as president, Apple had just sold its first iPhone, and Lehman Brothers was still in business.

But unemployment was also 4.7 percent versus 7.9 percent today, a reminder that stock gains have proved no elixir for the economy.

Still, the Dow high is another sign that the nation is slowly healing after the worst recession since the 1930s.

It comes as car sales are at a five-year high, home prices are rising, and U.S. companies continue to report big profits.

The stock gains have helped retirement and brokerage accounts held by many Americans recover. That, in turn, has helped push U.S. household wealth nearly back to its peak before the recession, though many in the middle class are still deep in the hole. Most middle-class wealth is tied up in home values, which are still a third below their peak.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

A board on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange shows the closing number for the Dow Jones industrial average on Tuesday. The Dow beat the high it set in October 2007, before the financial crisis and the Great Recession.

Good economic news Tuesday helped lift stocks. Retail sales in the 17 European countries that use the euro rose faster than expected, China’s government said it would support ambitious growth targets, and a report showed U.S. service companies grew last month at their fastest pace in a year.

“It feels great,” says Marty Leclerc, chief investment officer at Barack Yard Advisors, an investment firm. In early 2009, when stocks were plummeting, “it looked like Armageddon was nigh. It’s a lot more fun to be in a rising market.”

In the depths of the recession four years ago, few investors would have predicted such a fast recovery. Some feared another Great Depression. Banks were collapsing, lending was frozen, world trade was plunging, and stocks were in free fall.

“People thought we were going to relive the 1930s,” says Robert Buckland, chief global stock strategist at Citigroup. He calls the stock gains since “pretty remarkable.”

From its peak in October 2007 to its bottom in March 2009, the Dow fell 54 percent. That was far less than the nearly 90 percent drop in the Great Depression but scary nonetheless. There had been 11 previous bear markets since World War II and none had reached 50 percent.

One man who stayed calm and didn’t sell was Jay Sachs, 70, a retired

NEW YORK — Home diva Martha Stewart testified in court on Tuesday that she did nothing wrong when she signed an agreement to open up shops within most of J.C. Penney’s stores across the country.

Stewart testified in New York State Supreme Court as part of a legal battle over whether the company that she founded breached its contract to sell cookware, bedding and other items exclusively at Macy’s when she inked the deal with Penney in 2011.

Stewart, who founded Martha Stewart Living Omnimedia Inc., during three hours of testimony, denied Macy’s allegations that she did anything unethical in brokering the deal with Penney.

In fact, Stewart said it’s Macy’s that didn’t uphold its end of the agreement to try to maximize the potential of her business. She her brand, which is about a $300 million business at Macy’s, has grown “static” at the department store chain. She said she was hoping the business would exceed well over $400 million.

“We were disappointed,” Stewart, wearing a sleeveless jacket and mini skirt, testified. “We did have hopes that the business would be much bigger computer consultant. In fact, as others scrambled to exit stocks in late 2008, he plunged in more — scooping up drug maker Ely Lilly and Co., health-care products giant Johnson & Johnson and food company General Mills.

“You have to be greedy when others are fearful,” he says, quoting a famous line from billionaire Warren Buffett, who also bought in the panic. Sachs adds, “People are still fearful and that’s a good sign. There’s room for growth.”

He says his portfolio has doubled in value in four years.

As stock rebounds go, this has been an unusually quiet and uncelebrated one.

Typically, bull markets are accompanied by rising trading volume, a surge in young companies going public and Internet chatter over hot stocks.

The past four years, none of that has happened.

Adding to the chastened mood is lingering fear among many investors that stock gains can disappear in a flash.

Burned by two stock-market crashes in less than a decade, Americans have sold more U.S. stocks than they’ve bought the past four years, nearly unprecedented in a bull market since World War II.

Martha Stewart arrives Tuesday at New York State Supreme Court to testify in a legal battle between two of the nation’s largest retailers — Macy’s Inc. and J.C. Penney Co.

... We got to a certain dollar amount and struggled and never got any further.”

The trial, which began Feb. 20, focuses on whether Macy’s has the exclusive right to sell some Martha Stewart branded products.

Penney signed a pact in December 2011 with Martha Stewart Living to open shops at most of its 1,100 stores by this spring. But one month later, Macy’s renewed its long-standing exclusive deal until 2018 and sued Martha Stewart Living and Penney.

TSA eases rule on bats, small knives, golf clubs

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Airline passengers will be able to carry small knives, souvenir baseball bats, golf clubs and other sports equipment onto planes beginning next month under a policy change announced Tuesday by the head of the Transportation Security Administration.

The new policy conforms U.S. security standards to international standards, and allows TSA to concentrate its energies on more serious safety threats, the agency said in a statement.

The announcement, made by TSA Administrator John Pistole at an airline industry gathering in New York, drew an immediate outcry from unions representing flight attendants and other airline workers, who said the items are still dangerous in the hands of the wrong passengers.

Transport Workers Union Local 556, which represents over 10,000 flight attendants at Southwest Airlines, called the new policy “dangerous” and “short sighted,” saying it was designed to make “the lives of TSA staff easier, but not make flights safer.”

Advice

Ward off regrets later by easing up on wedding plans

Dear Amy: My boyfriend and I have been together since we were 16. We are now 22 years old and have graduated from college and are working in our professional fields. We moved in together last June. I am ready to get engaged and married and within three years start to have children. He, on the other hand, is not ready for any of that because he feels he's still really young (and in reality we are). We recently went to a friend's wedding. He felt very uncomfortable about it (as did I) and we got into a huge fight. He said things that he immediately regretted. How do I speed up the process of getting that ring on my finger and carry on with our life together?

— Anxious
Dear Anxious: Let's imagine that you successfully pressure your guy and get everything you want with the timetable you've attached to it. You get this by arguing about it and pressuring him. He relents because he loves you and wants you to be happy, because you've worn him down and because he can't think of truly "valid" reasons to delay. The years fly by. Your husband wakes up one day and realizes he's 30 years old with three children. A vague unhappiness sets in. He can't really put his finger on the cause. He wonders if he ever really wanted the life he leads.

He wishes he was single, and he blames you that he's not. Of course, none of this might happen, but putting the pressure on now increases the odds that you both will have regrets later. Table the topic for six months. Circle a date on the calendar where you mutually agree to talk about it again. The only power you should be prepared to wield is your choice to stay in the relationship — or to leave it if it isn't satisfying.
Dear Amy: "Concerned Friend" reported that her best friend was beautiful and yet always deflected compliments because of low self-esteem. It would be great if we taught people to graciously accept a compliment. Maybe if she learned to do that she would stop reflecting on her negative attributes — real or imaginary.

— Caroline
Dear Caroline: I agree. Saying "Thank you!" is a great start.

Baking soda, powder aren't synonymous

Dear Heloise: My mom has two different recipes for pumpkin roll. One of the recipes calls for 1 teaspoon baking soda, and the other calls for 1 teaspoon baking powder. What is the difference?
— Julie P., via email
Dear Julie P.: There definitely is a big, big difference! Both are used in baking to help dough rise or expand, but they do it differently and cannot be substituted for each other. Baking soda is made of pure, 100 percent sodium bicarbonate. When mixed with an acid (for example, cream of tartar) and some moisture, it causes a reaction that makes little bubbles, which helps the dough get puffy and light.

Baking powder is baking soda with one or more acidic ingredients included. Just by adding a liquid, the reaction occurs. It usually is added to a recipe where there is no acidic ingredient. Hope this helps and happy baking!
Dear Heloise: When chips get small and crumbly, I crush and store them in a plastic bag in the freezer. I just keep adding to the bag. When I make a casserole such as tuna noodle or macaroni, I have my topping ready and don't waste any chips.
— Dianne R., Lakeland, Fla.

'Worldly Christians' cling to old ways

Dear Rev. Graham: I've never gone to church before, so some of the things they talk about in the church I've started attending are kind of new to me. For example, what does it mean to be a "worldly Christian"? Our preacher talks about them, but he's never defined the term.
— Mrs. S. McN.
Dear Mrs. McN.: Don't be embarrassed to ask questions of your pastor or other people in your church, no matter how simple you may think they are. These people were just like you are when they started their spiritual journey, and they'll want to help you because they love you. A "worldly Christian" is a person who has put their faith and trust in Jesus Christ, but still clings to his or her old ways of living. Their behavior and their attitudes aren't much different from those of their unbelieving neighbors, and their motives and goals seldom take God into account. When the Apostle Paul addressed the Christians in the city of Corinth, he had to rebuke them for their worldly ways. He wrote, "Since there is jealousy and quarreling among you, are you not worldly? Are you not acting like mere men?" (1 Corinthians 3:3).

Statins should only be used if benefits outweigh side effects

Dear Dr. Roach: Why do commercials for cholesterol-lowering medications have a goal of 100 for bad cholesterol? I thought it was 180. I heard a guest on a television show say that everyone over 40 should be on a statin drug.
— T.Z.
Dear T.Z.: Let me answer the second question first. Not everybody needs a statin drug, regardless of age. Statin drugs lower the risk for a heart attack in people who already have blockages in their heart; many studies have proven this. For people without proven heart disease but with a high risk of heart disease, statins also reduce the risk of heart attack. However, since every drug has the possibility of side effects and can be expensive, it is important to use the medication only for people who are more likely to have benefit than a harm. This includes people with diabetes, with blockages in the arteries of the legs and people with multiple risk factors, including high blood pressure, smoking and a strong family history of heart disease. There is clear evidence that some people with multiple risk factors and a low HDL cholesterol (the good kind — think "H for healthy") can reduce their risk for heart attack even with normal total cholesterol levels. Only by taking a full history and exam and looking at cholesterol numbers and perhaps other laboratory data (such as the C-reactive protein) can your doctor or other provider give you the information you need to decide whether to take a statin. Remember also that taking a statin drug is not the only way to lower your risk of heart disease — a healthy diet and regular exercise do that, too.

If a statin is recommended and accepted, the decision of how low to push the LDL cholesterol (the bad kind — think "L for lousy") is less controversial, although there still is some disagreement. The standard recommendation is an LDL level below 100, with less than 70 optional for people at high risk. However, some of my colleagues who I respect use the highest tolerated dose, no matter what the LDL is, in order to give the most benefit.

Horoscope

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (March 6). Don't waste energy being too practical or thinking small. Make magical requests now while so much is working in your favor. You'll labor for free this month and then get paid handsomely for easy-peasy work in April. Projects and relationships reach a turning point in May. Invest in you. Family grows in December. Leo and Libra people adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 4, 9, 39, 11 and 7.
ARIES (March 21-April 19). Your people will see you the way they always have, regardless of what new wisdom you bring to the picture. If you want to be properly recognized, you'll have to venture out.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20). Waiting until you are stirred to do something isn't advised. Get in motion, and the practical aspects will soon come together to give you that inspired feeling or to render it unnecessary.
GEMINI (May 21-June 21). While tuning in to the people around you and all the humor, interest and beauty that's going on in your surroundings right now, you'll get the sneaking suspicion that these are the good times.
CANCER (June 22-July 22). You may find that you're acting on less of a thought process and more of a gut feeling. People will respect your decisions even if you can't back them up in rational terms. The less you say about it the better.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). You and a friend will occupy the same moment and have a vastly different experience of it. Find out what's going on with this person. Pisces energy is helping you expand your powers of empathy.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Your timing is sublime, largely because you're not getting too wrapped up in time periods over which you have no control, i.e., "then." Instead of thinking about where you were or where you'll be, notice where you are.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Your active imagination will be a delight to behold. Even those who can't relate to your creativity can at least appreciate that you bring a special something to the moment.
SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). In order to step through the porthole of intuition, you have to leave your baggage at the door. Any attachment you have to your story of the past or the future will only cloud your vision.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Whatever you are feeling, it is perfectly acceptable. Tell yourself this, even though you may not even be aware of what you're feeling. You need a reminder that it is safe to be yourself.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). You are decisive, but not closed-minded. There's a big difference. Choosing is movement. Someone who is already moving can just as easily move a different way. It's harder, though, for someone who is not moving.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). Though you're practiced in the art of conversation, since Mercury went retrograde, it hasn't been as easy for you. At times like this, words are inferior indicators of all you're learning through silent observation.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). It's a fine time to move your professional life into new territory. Mention your interests, volunteer to help, or turn in an application. Your strong intention will clear the way.

Happy birthday

Tax bills for rich approach 30-year high

By Stephen Ohlemacher
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The poor rich.

With Washington gridlocked again over whether to raise their taxes, it turns out wealthy families already are paying some of their biggest federal tax bills in decades even as the rest of the population continues to pay at historically low rates.

President Barack Obama and Democratic leaders in Congress say the wealthy must pay their fair share if the federal government is ever going to fix its finances and reduce the budget deficit to a manageable level.

A new analysis, however, shows that average tax bills for high-income families rarely have been higher since the Congressional Budget Office began tracking the data in 1979. Middle- and low-income families aren't paying as much as they used to.

For 2013, families with incomes in the top 20 percent of the nation will pay an average of 27.2 percent of their income in federal taxes, according to projections by the Tax Policy Center, a research organization based in Washington. The top 1 percent of households, those with incomes averaging $1.4 million, will pay an average of 35.5 percent.

Those tax rates, which include income, payroll, corporate and estate taxes, are among the highest since 1979.

The average family in the bottom 20 percent of households won't pay any federal taxes. Instead, many families in this group will get payments from the federal government by claiming more in credits than they owe in taxes, including payroll taxes. That will give them a negative tax rate.

"My sense is that high-income people feel abused by being targeted always for more taxes," Robertson Williams, a fellow at the Tax Policy Center, said. "You can understand why they feel that way."

Last week, Senate Democrats were unable to advance their proposal to raise taxes on some wealthy families for the second time this year as part of a package to avoid automatic spending cuts. The bill failed Thursday when Republicans blocked it. A competing Republican bill that included no tax increases also failed, and the automatic spending cuts began taking effect Friday.

The issue, however, isn't going away.

Obama and Democratic leaders in Congress insist that any future deal to reduce government borrowing must include a mix of spending cuts and more tax revenue.

"I am prepared to do hard things and to push my Democratic friends to do hard things," Obama said Friday. "But what I can't do is ask middle-class families, ask seniors, ask students to bear the entire burden of deficit reduction when we know we've got a bunch of tax loopholes that are benefiting the well-off and the well-connected, aren't contributing to growth, aren't contributing to our economy. It's not fair. It's not right."

On Sunday, Senate Republican Leader Mitch McConnell of Kentucky said Republicans are committed to reducing the budget deficit without raising taxes again. In a separate broadcast interview, White House economic adviser Gene Sperling called that position unreasonable.

'BUFFETT RULE'

The Democrats' sequester bill included the "Buffett Rule," named after billionaire investor Warren Buffett. It gradually would phase in a requirement that people making more than $1 million a year pay at least 30 percent of their income in federal taxes.

The rule targets millionaires who make most of their money from investments — capital gains and qualified dividends, which have a top tax rate of 20 percent.

"It's fairness," said Sen. Claire McCaskill, D-Mo. "We're not raising taxes with the Buffett rule as much as we are correcting an inequity in terms of, one guy can be working at one end of the hall and because he's working with hedge funds, he gets taxed at 20 percent. Another guy at the other end of the hall is on a salary at an insurance company and he has to pay (39.6 percent). That's just not fair."

On average, households

■ Bottom 20 percent
Average income: $10,552.
Average tax bill: -$284.
Average tax rate: -2.7 percent.
Share of federal tax burden: -0.4 percent.

■ Middle 20 percent making more than $1 million this year will pay 37.2 percent of their income in federal taxes, according to the Tax Policy Center. But there are exceptions.

For example, the Internal Revenue Service tracks tax returns for the 400 highest-paid filers each year. Those taxpayers made an average of $202 million in 2009, the latest year available. Their average federal income tax rate: 19.9 percent.

That's still higher than the tax rate paid by most middle-income families, but not by much.

The middle 20 percent of U.S. households — those making an average of $46,600 — will pay an average of 13.8 percent of their income in federal taxes for this year, according to the Tax Policy Center. Over the past three decades, the average federal tax rate for this group has been about 16 percent.

The Associated Press analyzed two sets of data to compare tax burdens over time.

The CBO produces data households will stay well below their averages for the same period.

Liberals and many Democrats say rich families can afford to pay higher taxes because their incomes have grown much more than incomes for middle- and low-income families.

TOP ONE PERCENT

Average after-tax incomes for the top 1 percent of households more than doubled from 1979 to 2009, increasing by 155 percent, according to the CBO. Average incomes for those in the middle increased by just 32 percent during the same period while those at the bottom saw their incomes go up by 45 percent.

"You've got to think about the context," said Chuck Marr, director of federal tax policy for the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, a liberal think tank. "We just had three decades in the United States where we had a tremendous increase in inequality."

The growing disparity in income is a big reason why tax bills for the rich are approaching 30-year highs, Williams said. As the rich get richer, a greater share of their income is taxed at the top rate, he said.

High-income families also have been targeted by tax increases this year, including a new tax law passed by Congress on Jan. 1 as well as tax increases in the president's health care law.

The new tax law made the federal income tax more progressive, increasing the top tax rate from 35 percent to 39.6 percent, on taxable income above $400,000 for individuals and $450,000 for married couples filing jointly. Lower tax rates on income below those amounts were made permanent. Also, tax breaks for low-income families first enacted as part of Obama's 2009 stimulus package were extended through 2017.

Conservatives say raising taxes again on the wealthy would reduce their incentive to save and invest, hurting long-term economic growth.

"Raising taxes hurts the economy, and raising taxes on upper-income individuals — whether those who work for salaries or those who save and earn capital income — always hurts the economy the most," said J.D. Foster, a fellow at the conservative Heritage Foundation. "Spite and envy are not sound bases for public policy."

Besides, Republican leaders in Congress say, one tax increase a year is more than enough. "Let's make it clear that the president got his tax hikes on Jan. 1," House Speaker John Boehner, R-Ohio, said Friday. "This discussion about revenue, in my view, is over."

Today in history

The Associated Press

Today is Wednesday, March 6, the 65th day of 2013. There are 300 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On March 6, 1933, a national bank holiday declared by President Franklin D. Roosevelt aimed at calming panicked depositors went into effect. (The holiday was supposed to last four days, but was extended until it was gradually lifted starting March 13.)

On this date:

In 1857, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled in Dred Scott v. Sandford that Scott, a slave, was not an American citizen and could not sue for his freedom in federal court.

In 1912, Oreo sandwich cookies were first introduced by the National Biscuit Co.

In 1933, Chicago Mayor Anton Cermak, wounded in an attempt on then-President-elect Franklin D. Roosevelt's life the previous month, died at a Miami hospital at age 59.

In 1970, a bomb being built inside a Greenwich Village townhouse by the radical Weathermen accidentally went off, destroying the house and killing three group members.

In 1983, in a case that drew much notoriety, a woman was gang-raped atop a pool table in a tavern in New Bedford, Mass., called Big Dan's; four men were later convicted of the attack.

Ten years ago: Democrats blocked President Bush's nomination of Miguel Estrada to a federal appeals court.

Five years ago: A Palestinian killed eight students at a Jewish seminary in Jerusalem before he was slain. Twin bombings in a shopping district in Baghdad killed at least 68 people and wounded 130 others.

One year ago: Former Texas tycoon R. Allen Stanford was convicted in Houston of bilking his investors out of more than $7 billion through a Ponzi scheme he'd operated for 20 years. (Stanford was sentenced to 110 years in prison.) Six British soldiers patrolling near the border between Helmand and Kandahar provinces in Afghanistan were killed by a bomb.

BEST BETS

7 p.m. on 14
Whitney

Whitney's (Whitney Cummings) excitement over seeing her half sister, Lauren (Natasha Leggero), is tempered when she learns the reason for the visit. Alex and Mark (Chris D'Elia, Dan O'Brien) try to cheer up R.J. (Tone Bell) after a breakup leaves him depressed in the new episode "Lost in Transition."

8 p.m. on 44
Criminal Minds

When an escaped convict in Texas leaves a trail of murder victims with their mouths sewn shut, Rossi (Joe Mantegna) and his colleagues realize they've dealt with this killer before. Linguistics expert Alex Blake (Jeanne Tripplehorn) joins the team in "The Silencer." Thomas Gibson, Shemar Moore and Kirsten Vangsness also star.

8 p.m. on 63
Haunted Collector

In the 12 new episodes of Season 3, paranormal collector John Zaffis and his team of investigators respond to SOS calls from around the country by individuals and businesses who claim to have been terrorized by items taken over by paranormal spirits and/or energy.

8 p.m. on 13
The Rachel Zoe Project

A fashion-themed evening on the cable channel opens with this series featuring stylist Rachel Zoe and her team. In Season 5, viewers will go along for the ride as Rachel continues to build her business to include a women's wear line, celebrity styling business, social media team and hair salon.

9 p.m. on 44
CSI: Crime Scene Investigation

Ted Danson shares the screen with another of Kelsey Grammer's former co-stars in this episode. Peri Gilpin ("Frasier") guest stars as the wife of Danson's character, D.B. Russell, who is by his side as he leads the team on a search for his kidnapped granddaughter. Elisabeth Shue and Eric Szmanda also star in "Karma to Burn."

9 p.m. on 15
America's Supernanny

The Arnolds, parents of five, are so overwhelmed by their brood of five children that they've pretty much given up. Mom is exhausted, Dad uses sarcasm to cope, and the kids are running wild. Deborah needs to use all the tools at her disposal to turn this unhappy household around in the new episode "The Arnold Family."

9 p.m. on 16
Southland

This new episode is called "Under the Big Top," and it fits, given the circuslike nature of the officers' workload. While John and Lucero (Michael Cudlitz, Anthony Ruivivar) deal with one strange call after another, Ben and Sammy (Ben McKenzie, Shawn Hatosy) watch bank robbers throw cash from their getaway car. Lydia and Ruben (Regina King, Dorian Missick) investigate when a man turns up roasted — and not in that fun Friars Club way.

9 p.m. on 11
Psych

Gus (Dule Hill) gets a girlfriend (Parminder Nagra, in a recurring guest role), and Juliet (Maggie Lawson) goes under cover on an online dating site to catch a killer while Shawn (James Roday) tries to holster his jealousy. Cybill Shepherd also guest stars in the new episode "Juliet Takes a Luvvah."

9 p.m. on 13
It's a Brad, Brad World

Brad Goreski is back for a new season styling A-list individuals as well as magazine features, product campaigns and more. In the season premiere, he puts together 30 looks for Kate Spade New York's spring/summer presentation while getting his celebrity clients ready for New York Fashion Week. One of those clients is actress Minka Kelly ("Friday Night Lights"), who needs to move her fitting — complicating Brad's already tight schedule.

9:30 p.m. on 13
Dukes of Melrose

This is not your mother's secondhand clothing store ... unless your mother had a closet full of haute couture. A Hollywood boutique called Decades is the setting for this new docu-series, which follows shop owners Cameron Silver and Christos Garkinos as they track down rare vintage clothes for their well-heeled customers. In the premiere, actress Rachael Harris wants them to find her a dress for the Oscars.

9:45 p.m. on 11
Movie: The Day After Tomorrow

Some dismissed this 2004 drama as propaganda fueled by bad science, but no matter what you believe about global warming, it's a heck of a story with impressive special effects. Dennis Quaid stars as the requisite maverick scientist who must convince the skeptical authorities that a disaster — in this case, a new ice age — is imminent. Jake Gyllenhaal, Sela Ward and Emmy Rossum also star, with Perry King as the president.

10 p.m. on 44
Two and a Half Men

Well, the apple didn't fall far from the tree — or uncle, in this case. Charlie (Charlie Sheen) is left to cover when Jake (Angus T. Jones) disappears with the pretty daughter (guest star Tinashe Kachingwe) of a new neighbor (guest star Michael Clarke Duncan), a former NFL player who is built like a human mountain. Meanwhile, Alan (Jon Cryer) scores a hot date, thanks in part to Charlie's fancy car, in "The Mooch at the Boo."
